OK - then really all we can do at this stage is recommed that they include / adhere to final versions of these documents, since there's no "final" approach / documents / guidance for us to reference, and we don't have a means for predicting where that may end up. We'll also mention in the comments that coordination is still ongoing between FWS and BLM with respect to these issues. For the 2 (and soon to be 3) drafts that we've commented on, they don't plan on going to final until the State finishes its new sage-grouse strategy (after the 1st of the year) - BLM wants to make sure that they are consistent with the State plan. So - there's still some time for that language to be fleshed out more between the agencies prior to these going final, although we all know how that seems to fly... Thanks Jesse,

Jeff

We are asking them to work on completing the adaptive management, invasives/fire, monitoring, mitigation strategies between draft and final. I think we need to be asking them to include complete monitoring, adaptive management, mitigation, etc strategies in their final plans. That may mean their schedule slips on these planning docs, but I'm not sure how they can cobble together a final plan that meets the COT objectives without those components.

Hi guys - we're sending out the next round of comments (Billings RMP). What should I cite as the latest fire, monitoring, mitigation, and adaptive management language for them to incorporate into the document? (or should I simply say to use "the latest"?). The one I'm sure I don't have is adaptive management. Thanks attached were some thoughts I had last night regarding these revisions. While the whole PECE thing stuns me, my real fall on the sword issue are the edits on the last page.

Jeff,

I never got the final version of the adaptive management language. Here is the last draft I have in my e-mail.
