We could probably find known mine sites and create a model of potential mine sites like we are doing with oil and gas. Other data sets on this page are ones I've looked at before, the potential for minerals specifically, and there have been issues with location quality. I could certainly contact Peter, and get a better feel from someone who is actually a geologist about what could be done. Another thought, is to try to mine the BLM LR2000 database for mining leases. But that will take me some time, a day, probably.
