

November 15 Migration Peak Field Trip

For all levels of birdwatchers – This field trip will focus on both waterfowl and raptor identification. Mid-November normally coincides with the peak of the fall waterfowl migration with the possibility of observing 15 to 20 species of ducks, geese and swans. It also offers excellent opportunities to view hawks, eagles and owls in the Klamath Basin with the possibility of observing 8-10 species in a single day.

This event will begin and end at the parking lot just south of the main entrance to Lower Klamath Refuge. Participants will have the opportunity to ride with tour leaders on a small bus (space available to those who sign up early) or accompany the group in their personal vehicles. The tour will begin promptly at 8:30 with a return to the parking area about 11:30. Participants will have the option to continue on an afternoon field trip to nearby Tule Lake Refuge if they wish. Attendees should bring binoculars, extra drinking water, hot drinks, a sack lunch, snacks, sturdy shoes and layered clothing. Spotting scopes and binoculars will be provided to those needing them. Advanced reservations are required and space on the bus will be available in the order reservations are made. To make reservations call (530) 667-2231.
