

A Swampers Life

The term swamper was given to the people who once lived in the Okefenokee Swamp. The Chesser family were swampers who first settled in the Okefenokee in 1858 on what is now called Chesser Island. The homestead you are visiting was built by Tom and Iva Chesser in 1927. The Chesser's were able to grow, catch, or make most of what they needed.

After your tour, complete the activities below. For more information about the Chessers, read the brochure Chesser Island Homestead.

On the list below, draw a rectangle around each object that can be found in a swampers home, draw an oval around each object found in a modern home, and draw a squiggly line around each object that can be found in both.

The Chesser's did not have a supermarket near them to purchase their food. Instead, they grew, collected and hunted for much of their food.

Write down two vegetables they grew, two fruits they grew or collected, and two animals they raised or hunted.

The Chesser's had to be resourceful, using what was around them to make many of their tools, toys and products to use and to sell.

What were two items that they made out of palmetto and how were they used?

What were two products the Chesser's made that they sold or traded?

To help out the family, children often had chores to do around the homestead. Why did the children sweep the yard?

What were two other chores that the Chesser children did around the homestead.

Before there were radios and cell phones to communicate in the swamp, swampers would communicate over long distances by "hollerin'". This is a unique type of yodeling, often used as a hunter's signal to his family that he was bound for home or sometimes just as an expression of happiness.

Find a partner, decide what your "holler" will sound like, then stand in one line with your partner in another line about 30 feet apart. Taking turns with the other students, yell out your "holler" then have your partner yell back the "holler". Tell your fellow students why you chose to "holler" the way you did. Now try to spell-out your "holler" below.

Almost everything the Chesser's owned had a use.

Draw your favorite thing that you have seen at the Chesser Homestead and describe how it was used.
