Re: USFWS Request for Public Comments on the “Draft Clarification of Select Terms Under the Marine Mammal Protection Act in Regard to Sea Otters”.

Dear Ms. Mann:

Thank you for the opportunity to provide remarks on the request for public comments on select terms to assist the USFWS (Service) in clarifying the interpretation of “coastal dwelling,” “mass produced,” and “significantly altered from their natural form,” as they apply to Alaska Native handicrafts and clothing made from sea otter parts under the Marine Mammals Protection Act (MMPA).

In general terms, the MMPA, in addition to the congressional intent language quoted in your letter, recognizes and protects the traditional harvest patterns of marine mammals by coastally dwelling Alaska Natives. Because of this distinction and intent to protect Alaska Native traditions, highlighted in Senator Stevens’ testimony,<sup>1</sup> “to protect the right of Native peoples to continue their centuries-old way of life...,” we strongly recommend that, when defining terms, you rely entirely upon the experience and knowledge of those for whom these exemptions were explicitly intended. It is entirely reasonable for the Service to work through existing co-management bodies empowered through the MMPA, such as the Indigenous People’s Council for Marine Mammals<sup>2</sup> (IPCoMM), to gain the best understanding of how to meet the needs and intents of coastal tribes and therefore best fulfill the purpose for the exemptions and provide for the protections mandated within the Act.

Sec 101 (b) of the MMPA states: “Except as provided in section 1379 of this title, the provisions of this chapter shall not apply with respect to the taking of any marine mammal by any Indian, Aleut, or Eskimo who resides in Alaska and who dwells on the coast of the North Pacific Ocean or the Arctic Ocean if such taking –

- (1) is for subsistence purposes; or
- (2) is done for purposes of creating and selling authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing: Provided, That only authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing may be sold in interstate commerce: And provided further, That any edible portion of marine mammals may be sold in native villages and towns in Alaska or for native consumption. For the purposes of this subsection, the term “authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing” means items composed wholly or in some significant respect of natural materials, and which are produced, decorated, or fashioned in the exercise of traditional native handicrafts without the use of pantographs, multiple carvers, or other mass copying devices. Traditional native handicrafts include, but are not limited to weaving, carving, stitching, sewing, lacing, beading, drawing and painting; and
- (3) in each case, is not accomplished in a wasteful manner.”

We submit the following comments regarding the select terms.

1. “Dwells on the Coast – refers to residing in Alaska and living permanently in an area or community that is adjacent to waters that are tidally influenced or in an area commonly inhabited and used by marine mammals.”

The State of Alaska does not support this overly restrictive definition of “dwells on coast.” It places significant additional burdens on coastal Natives that are not explicitly required in the MMPA. Alaska Native peoples have always relied on marine mammals to meet a variety of their needs. In particular, the traditional territories of Southeast indigenous peoples extend far into the interior of the Yukon Territories, British Columbia, and Alaska. Because their traditional activities have been classified as semi-nomadic, both in historical and modern times, it would be inappropriate and inconsiderate of their well-documented customs and traditions to restrict sea otter harvest to individuals who dwell permanently in tidally influenced areas or to require that these individuals remain permanent residents of the coast in order to carry on these important practices.

While it may be within the authority of the Service to refine a definition of “coastal,” it seems inconsistent with the MMPA exemption to be overly restrictive in such a way that prevents access by those whose uses are protected by the Act. We recommend that the Service work through IPCoMM and coastal tribes to provide a definition that better meets the needs of the tribes who depend upon sea otters. If the Service chooses not to work through IPCoMM and coastal tribes it will be critical to ensure that “living permanently” is unambiguously defined and that easily understood maps of “authorized” communities are made available to the public.

2. “Large-scale mass production – refers to the use of mass copying devices such as pantographs, multiple carvers, embroidery machines, cutting presses, stencils, transfers, stamps, and/or the use of assembly line production. The formation of traditional Native groups or cooperatives and the use of modern implements such as sewing machines are permitted. However, there can be no manufacturing on a large-scale by means of extensive mechanization or division of labor, such as using a standardized pattern on a large-scale.”

The MMPA provides a basis for limiting commercial production of marine mammal parts in order to recognize and protect traditional methods and means and to ensure that large-scale commercial activity is not occurring. The Act states that “authentic native handicrafts and articles of clothing are to be produced without the use of pantographs, multiple carvers, or other mass copying devices.” The proposed language goes too far by restricting the use of common tools and techniques, such as embroidery machines, stencils, and stamps. Furthermore, because new technologies can improve quality of workmanship and therefore increase sale value, it would be inappropriate to prevent indigenous artisans from incorporating new non-commercial technologies, such as embroidery machines, stencils, stamps, and other tools, into the fashioning of their handicrafts.

3. “Significantly altered from their natural form – a. ...a tanned, dried, cured, or preserved part of a sea otter hide, devoid only of the head, feet, and tail (i.e., blocked), or any other remaining parts of the hide, must be substantially changed through means including, but not limited to: weaving, carving, stitching, sewing, lacing, beading, drawing, painting, or other handicrafting methods...

b. Items will not be considered significantly altered from their natural form where merely minimal changes have been made to a hide devoid only of the head, feet, and tail (i.e., blocked), and where those items can be easily converted back to an unaltered piece of hide...”

The Act itself does not include the phrase “significantly altered” but it does clearly provide guidance as to what comprises “authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing:” these items are “composed...in some significant respect of natural materials...” The state does not support an overly restrictive definition for the term “significantly altered;” rather, we encourage the Service to once again work closely with indigenous organizations and coastal tribes to determine how to best meet their needs for customary and traditional uses, handicrafting, and sale, which the exemptions in the Act are designed by Congress to support and preserve.

Dear Mr. Ashe:

I am enclosing a copy of the comments the Alaska Federation of Natives (AFN) submitted to the USFWS in Alaska on August 2, 2013. Our comments are in response to a March 1, 2013, request for public comments on several policy interpretations of statutory and regulatory terms contained in the Marine Mammal Protection Act (MMPA) and implementing regulations. As discussed in detail in our comments, AFN is opposed to the USFWS efforts to “clarify” the terms “dwells on the coast”, “large scale mass production” and “significantly altered from their natural form” in the context of the creation of authentic Native handicrafts composed of sea otter parts.

First, the proposed interpretations of these terms do not result in clarity, but only more confusion. The terms FWS seeks to “clarify” are applicable to all marine mammals – not just sea otters. In some cases, the proposed interpretations are inconsistent with that given those same terms by the National Marine Fisheries Service (NMFS), which shares responsibility for implementing the MMPA. The proposed policy interpretations of several of the terms are inconsistent with the statutory language and overriding purpose of the Native exemption in the MMPA. We can only conclude that the proposed interpretation of these terms is aimed at restricting the harvest of sea otters rather than fulfilling the Congressional intent of allowing Alaska Natives to continue to take marine mammals for the purpose of creating and selling authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing. The Secretary is authorized to regulate the takings of sea otters for the making of authentic Native handicrafts that are not done in a wasteful manner only if he finds the particular species or stock to be “depleted.” There has been no such determination with regard to sea otters in Alaska.

In closing, we urge USFWS to abandon its efforts and to work with its co-management partners to address any ambiguity that exists with regard to statutory or regulatory terms as they relate to sea otters.

Thank you for your attention to this matter. Please let us know if you have questions or need additional information.

Sincerely,

Julie Kitka

RE: USFWS Request for Public Comments on Select Terms under the Marine Mammal Protection Act in Regard to Sea Otters

On behalf of the Alaska Federation of Natives (AFN), I submit the following comments in response to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service March 1, 2013, request for public comments on select terms under the Marine Mammal Protection Act (MMPA) in regard to sea otters. As we understand it, the deadline for submission of comments was extended until August 6.

AFN is the largest Native organization in Alaska. Its membership includes 178 villages (both federally-recognized tribes and village corporations), 13 regional for-profit Native corporations (established by Congress pursuant to the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act), and 11 regional Native nonprofit tribal consortia that offer a broad range of human services to their member villages. AFN's primary mission is to enhance and promote the cultural, economic and political voice of all Alaska Natives. Our priorities are decided through a resolutions process at our Annual Convention in October. Protection of the subsistence way of life for Alaska Natives is one of our top priorities.

On March 1, 2013, FWS announced its proposal to adopt several policy interpretations for statutory and regulatory terms contained in the MMPA and its implementing regulations with respect to sea otters. Those terms are "dwells on the coast", "large scale mass production" and "significantly altered from their natural form." As we discuss more fully below, we believe FWS's efforts to define these terms will not result in clarity, but only more confusion. First, the terms the agency seeks to clarify are relevant to all marine mammals – not just sea otters. In addition, the agency's interpretations are in some cases inconsistent with the interpretation given those same terms by the National Marine Fisheries Service (NMFS), which shares responsibility for implementing the MMPA. Furthermore, the proposed policy interpretation of several of these terms is inconsistent with the statutory language and overriding purpose of the Native exemption in the MMPA. We strongly oppose the proposed interpretations and urge the FWS to abandon its efforts and to work with its co-management partners to address these issues. Specifically, with respect to the proposed definition of "significantly altered," we request that FWS adopt the definition that was developed in 2012 by Alaska Native hunters and artisans, working with the Indigenous Peoples Council on Marine Mammals (IPCoMM), and endorsed by AFN at its 2012 Annual Convention.

Background: The overriding purpose of the MMPA is the protection of marine mammals, but the purpose of Section 101(b), the exemption for Alaska Natives, 16 U.S.C. § 1371(b), is to preserve to Alaska Natives a right to hunt and use marine mammals which they have exercised from long before western contact. The Native-exemption provision currently reads, in relevant part:

Except as provided in section 1379<sup>1</sup> of this title, the provisions of this chapter shall not apply with respect to the taking of any marine mammal by any Indian, Aleut, or Eskimo who resides in Alaska and who dwells on the coast of the North Pacific Ocean or Arctic Ocean if such taking –

- (1) Is for subsistence purposes; or
- (2) Is done for the purposes of creating and selling authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing. . . . And provided further, that any edible portion of marine mammals may be sold in native villages and towns in Alaska or for native consumption. For the purposes of this subsection, the term “authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing” means items composed wholly or in some significant respect of natural materials, and which are produced, decorated, or fashioned in the exercise of traditional native handicrafts without the use of pantographs, multiple carvers, or other mass copying devices. Traditional native handicrafts include, but are not limited to weaving, carving, stitching, sewing, lacing, beading, drawing and painting.
- (3) In each case, is not accomplished in a wasteful manner.

Notwithstanding the preceding provisions of this subsection, when, under this chapter, the Secretary determines any species or stock of marine mammal subject to taking by Indians, Aleuts, or Eskimos to be depleted, he may prescribe regulations upon the taking of such marine mammals by any Indian, Aleut, or Eskimo described in this subsection. . . . “

The implementing regulations, 50 C.F.R. § 18.3, define “authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing” as follows:

Authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing means items made by an Indian, Aleut, or Eskimo that (a) are composed wholly or in some significant respect of natural materials and (b) are significantly altered from their natural form and are produced, decorated, or fashioned in the exercise of traditional native handicrafts without the use of pantographs, multiple carvers, or similar mass-copying devices. Improved methods of production utilizing modern implements such as sewing machines or modern techniques at a tannery registered pursuant to § 18.23(c) may be used so long as no large-scale mass-production industry results. Traditional native handicrafts include, but are not limited to, weaving, carving, stitching, sewing, lacing, beading, drawing, and painting. The formation of traditional native groups, such as cooperatives, is permitted so long as no large-scale mass production results.

The purpose of the Native exemption: The purpose of the exemption was to allow Alaska Natives who had historically relied upon marine mammals for economic, nutritional and cultural purposes as a core component of their way of life to continue to do so, notwithstanding the otherwise applicable moratorium. The breadth of the exemption intended (and the right conferred by Congress) is well illustrated by the remarks on the Senate Floor by the exemption’s sponsor, Senator Ted Stevens:

Native Alaskans are proud. They do not ask for special treatment from the Federal Government. But, nonetheless, they, too, have the right to be let alone, to follow their traditional way of life. It is this way of life I seek to protect in this bill.

[M]arine mammals have been the foundation of the [Alaska Native] cultures and economy for as long as these people have occupied the northern and western coasts of Alaska. Even if their economic dependence on ocean mammals is removed, their cultural roots in them will remain and should be given protection.

Today, Americans are interested in conservation. The word "conservation" means to preserve and not to waste or destroy. We must conserve the Native culture, just as we must conserve the ocean mammals.

Extensive coastal bartering and sale of mammal foods takes place. Eskimos in the interior of Alaska and in coastal areas with lean harvests are as dependent upon these animals as are their more fortunate neighbors. Moreover, Natives who have moved to the cities of Alaska and elsewhere, still retain a craving for mammal foods.

118 CONG. REC. 25258-59 (1972). See also, e.g., id. at 8401 (statement of Sen. Stevens) (recognizing that Native culture was evolving and adapting, so as to prosper (not just survive) in contemporary conditions, Senator Stevens made plain that he intended that Native communities be “permitted to make a living.”) As Senator Stevens stated: “If Congress enacts provisions outlawing all but subsistence hunting [referring to physical sustenance alone] by Alaskan Natives, not only will this proud group of Americans have their economic livelihood stripped from them, but they will face the certain fate of cultural extinction.” Id. at 8400. See also e.g., id. at 25260, quoting George Miller, President of Cook Inlet Regional Native Association, as follows:

Thus, while ocean mammal harvesting by the Natives of Cook Inlet is not as extensive as that conducted by Natives living further north, we nevertheless share in the rich bounty which they take from the sea. In addition, it is important to note that some of our people travel north to participate directly in the seasonal ocean mammal harvesting which takes place in the North Pacific and Bering Sea.

The first court to consider the meaning of the Native-exemption provision concluded that its plain language provided that

Alaskan Natives may continue to hunt and take walrus without regard to the moratorium, provided that (1) the species is not depleted, (2) the takings are not wasteful, and (3) the takings are conducted only for subsistence purposes or for the purpose of creating and selling authentic native articles of handicraft and clothing.

People of Togiak v. United States, 470 F. Supp. 423, 425 (D.D.C. 1979); accord, id. at 427. The court in that case also stressed "the responsibility of the federal government to protect the way of life of the Alaskan Natives . . . , including their tradition of hunting marine mammals for their subsistence. . . ." Id. at 426-27. The court accordingly concluded that the MMPA "permits Alaskan Natives to hunt non-depleted walrus in a non-wasteful manner for the purposes specified in [§ 1371(b)]." Id. at 430.

No decision since then has cast a shadow of a doubt on that conclusion. See Didrickson v. United States Dept. of Interior, 982 F.2d 1332 (9th Cir. 1992), aff'g 796 F. Supp. 1281 (D. Alaska 1991); United States v. Clark, 912 F.2d 1087 (9th Cir. 1990), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 1037 (1991); Didrickson, No. A85-336 Civil (D. Alaska, Order of 27 June 1988); Katelnikoff v. United States Dept. of Interior, 657 F. Supp. 659 (D. Alaska 1986).

Proposed Interpretation of "Significantly Altered": For several years, AFN has witnessed a growing conflict between Native artisans and USFWS law enforcement officials over the regulatory definition of "significantly altered" as it applies to the creation and sale of authentic Native handicrafts. Regulations promulgated by USFWS (50 CFR 18.3) and NMFS (50 CFR 216.3) both use the term "significantly altered from their natural form" in the definition of an article of authentic native handicrafts. Because that term has never been clearly defined, law enforcement agents are left to make subjective judgments about what constitutes "significantly altered." NMFS, for example, considers a drawing with indelible ink on the hide side of a tanned Northern fur seal pelt to be a handicraft, whereas FWS does not consider a sea otter hide that has been drawn on with a marker to be a handicraft. The increased law enforcement efforts by USFWS have had a "chilling" affect on the use of sea otters for the making of handicrafts, at a time when there are increasing concerns about the growth of the sea otter population in Southeast Alaska, and the corresponding decline in commercially important shellfish, including Dungeness crab, as well as other subsistence resources.

To address this problem, the Indigenous Peoples Council on Marine Mammals (IPCoMM), with funding from USFWS created a Working Group consisting of both hunters and artisans from around the state who take sea otters for the purpose of creating and selling authentic handicrafts and clothing. This group met over a three day period in October, 2012, and formulated what we believe is a clear and acceptable interpretation of “significantly altered” that would alleviate the enforcement problems stemming from the current vague language. A copy of the language developed by this work group is attached. That language was presented in a draft Resolution to the AFN Board of Directors, which approved it for presentation to the delegates to the AFN 2012 annual convention. The 4,000+ Alaska Native delegates attending the Convention adopted the Resolution on October 19, 2012. A copy of AFN Resolution 12-10 is enclosed.

In late December, we learned that the Regional Office of USFWS had rejected the definition proposed by IPCoMM, and planned to engage in tribal consultation on entirely different language. We believe that the decision to engage in tribal consultation completely ignored the fact that IPCoMM itself is composed of tribal representatives from each of the regional Alaska Native Marine Mammal Commissions, whose members in turn are tribal members authorized by their member tribes to speak for them on issues involving subsistence use and conservation of marine mammals. Further complicating the issue, the FWS on March 1, 2013, issued notice that it would be seeking public input on draft language, not only on “significantly altered but also to “clarify” the terms “dwells on the coast” and “large scale mass production.”

The difference between the definition adopted by IPCoMM and the one now proposed by FWS is apparent. FWS’ definition seems aimed at ensuring that Alaska Natives cannot make handicrafts which may be purchased by a non-Native, repurposed, and then resold. By developing a small list of items that are acceptable, the FWS is limiting artistic abilities and thereby suppressing artistic expression. Rather than focusing on definitions of “significantly altered” that are aimed at prohibiting certain handicrafts, it should refocus its enforcement efforts to those consumers who are purchasing handicrafts and repurposing them for resale.

As an initial matter, the term “significantly altered” is not contained in the statutory definition of authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing. As the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals held, “the statute places two requirements on what may be classed as “authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing:” (1) they must be made at least in part from “natural materials” and (2) the type of production must be done in traditional native ways, such as weaving, carving, and stitching, but not through methods of mass production.” Didrickson, supra, 982 F.2d at 1341-42. Congress expressly said that traditional native handicrafts include, but are not limited to weaving, carving, stitching, sewing, lacing, beading, drawing and painting. There is no requirement that the item be “significantly altered from their natural form.” Given the fact that Alaska Natives historically used every part of the animal and had an acknowledged tradition of trading and selling handicrafts as a basis for their small cash economy (the whole reason for the handicraft provision in the statute) leads us to believe that Congress did not intent to restrict the items that Alaska Natives can make and sell to only those the FWS considers “significantly altered.” By imposing the requirement that the item be “significantly altered” and then defining that term in such as way as to require a certain amount of stitching or a certain number of buttons, for example, goes far beyond the statutory definition.

The district court in Didrickson v. U.S. Department of Interior, 796 F. Supp. 1281 (D. Alaska 1991), in discussing the FWS regulation interpreting the phrase “authentic native articles of handicrafts” with respect to sea otters, held that the statute did not mandate restriction of its handicraft exemption to apply only to articles commonly produced on or before December 21, 1972. The Court stated that

So long as the harvest is made by an Alaskan Native for either subsistence purposes of for making such articles of handicraft or clothing, and is not “wasteful”, the Secretary is authorized to regulate such takings only if he finds the particular species or stock to be “depleted. The question of what should qualify as authentic native handicrafts or clothing does involve policy choices among competing interests. However, Congress has already made those determinations by providing its definition, complete with a non-exclusive list of examples.

Didrickson, supra at 1288. The USFWS is once again attempting to regulate Alaska Natives’ taking of sea otters for the purposes of creating and selling authentic native handicrafts by restricting what can be considered an authentic Native handicraft, without a showing that the taking is wasteful, and prior to a finding of depletion. Such efforts are clearly inconsistent with the plain language of the MMPA, and the Court decisions interpreting it.

Proposed Interpretation of “Dwells on the Coast”: UWFWS proposes the following definition:

Dwells on the Coast refers to residing in Alaska and living permanently in an area or community that is adjacent to waters that are tidally influenced or in an area commonly inhabited and used by marine mammals.

The MMPA does not require that an Alaska Native “reside permanently” on the coast. The only residency requirement Congress intended to impose upon Alaska Natives was one of State residency. That is plain from the legislative history, 118 Cong. Rec. 25260, quoting George Miller, President of Cook Inlet Regional Native Association, who noted . . . “it is important to note that some of our people travel north to participate directly in the seasonal ocean mammal harvesting, which takes place in the North Pacific and Bering Sea.” Obviously, the whole concept of “adjacency to waters used by marine mammals” is too narrow an interpretation since many Alaska Natives may live inland, yet they have traditionally relied upon subsistence use of marine mammals. Moreover, it is unclear what is meant by “tidally influenced” or “areas commonly inhabited” or “used by marine mammals.” In some cases marine mammals migrate upstream into freshwater areas and beyond areas they commonly inhabit. Finally, the NMFS has a different interpretation of the term “resides on the coast.”

In short, the USFWS interpretation suffers from the same problem as its interpretation of “significantly altered” – it will create more ambiguity than already exists and it is simply an attempt to place additional restrictions on subsistence users that are not required by the MMPA. The Native exemption is just that, an exemption designed to preserve the Native way of life and the right of Alaska Natives like all other citizens (in Senator Stevens’ words) “to be let alone,” by the government “to follow their traditional way of life,” not a mandate for harassment.

This is not the first time the USFWS has attempted to impose a proximity-to-the-coast residency requirement. In 1996, in a case involving Elmer Ward, a resident of the village of Kobuk, Special Agents with the USFWS informed Ward that he had violated the MMPA by killing two walrus near Kotzebue. Ward had travelled from Kobuk to Kotzebue, as he had done in the past and went subsistence hunting with relatives. The hunting party caught two walrus and shared the products of the hunt in the traditional way. Ward took some of the walrus blubber and other products back to Kobuk with him for subsistence uses by his family and other members of his village. After learning about this hunt, special law enforcement agents determined that a crime may have been committed because plaintiff’s place of residence, Kobuk, was more than 50 miles from the coast. Despite the complete absence of a 50-miles-from-the-coast residency requirement in the MMPA, or the implementing regulations adopted by the Secretary, or any policy of the USFWS, formal or otherwise, the defendants in that case received authorization to target Ward in a criminal investigation from their supervisor, the Anchorage-based Assistant Regional Director of the USFWS in charge of law enforcement in Alaska.

The investigation led to an illegal search of Mr. Ward’s freezers and confiscation of some of the blubber. The agents had no probable cause or even a reasonable suspicion that a crime had been committed, and had no rational basis for doing what they did to Ward and his family. The district court found that the agents violated Ward’s Fourth Amendment rights, and in an unreported opinion, the Ninth Circuit affirmed the district court’s rejection of a qualified immunity defense by the agents because it concluded that a reasonable official would have understood at the relevant time that the actions alleged violated Ward’s rights. Ward v. Webb, 234 F.3rd 1279, 2000 WL 1154973 (C.A.9 (Alaska)). On remand, the case was settled in Mr. Ward’s favor.

The 50-miles-from-the-coast rule fabricated by the defendants in the Ward case was derived from the “dwells on the coast” phrase found in § 1371(b). Yet, Mr. Ward had customarily and traditionally depended upon marine mammal resources and had harvested marine mammals for subsistence purposes as had others from his village. The current proposed interpretation of the “dwells on the coast” language is even more restrictive than the one relied upon by law enforcement in the Ward case, and will undoubtedly make criminals of hunters and artisans who may live some distance from the coast, but who have a long-standing reliance on marine mammals, and for that reason alone, it should be rejected.

“Large-scale Mass Production”: The USFWS proposes the following interpretation of the term “large-scale mass production:

Large-scale mass production refers to the use of mass copying devices such as pantographs, multiple carvers, embroidery machines, cutting presses, stencils, transfers, stamps, and/or the use of assembly line production. The formation of traditional Native groups or cooperatives and the use of modern implements such as sewing machines are permitted. However, there can be no manufacturing on a large-scale by means of extensive mechanization or division of labor, such as using a standardized pattern on a large-scale.

This definition does not clarify what the USFWS considers “large scale,” which one assumes is the main objective of the proposed clarification. It is clear that what Congress intended to prohibit was large commercial enterprises, not work performed by traditional Native groups or cooperatives. Were this definition adopted, law enforcement officers would still be required to use their subjective judgment as to what is large scale.

The proposed interpretation is inconsistent with the purposes of the MMPA, which is to allow and protect the Alaska Native way of life. Senator Stevens recognized that coastal Alaska Natives depend on marine mammals for their cultural existence, which includes their economic well-being. He recognized that Native culture was evolving and adapting, so as to prosper (not just survive) in contemporary conditions. He recognized the role that the sale of food and handicrafts could have in accomplishing full utilization of an animal carcass that would benefit Native peoples. See 118 Cong. Rec., supra, at 8400 (statement of Sen. Stevens). As noted by Caleb Pungowiyi in congressional hearings in 2000 on the reauthorization of the MMPA, “Fundamentally, the production of handicrafts is not a commercial activity, but a continuation and adaptation to a market economy of an ancient Native tradition of making and then bartering handicrafts and clothing for other needed items.” Hearings on the Marine Mammal Protection Act: Oversight Hearings before the Subcomm. On Fisheries Conservation of the Committee on Resources, 106th Cong. 182-95 (2000) (statement of Caleb Pungowiyi, Chairman MMPA Reauthorization Committee of IPCOMM). The definition proposed by USFWS places additional restrictions and burdens on subsistence hunters and artisans that were not intended by Congress and not authorized by the MMPA.

The prohibition on “division of labor” could potentially prohibit family members from working together to produce handicrafts and clothing. The MMPA does not prohibit the use of embroidery machines, cutting presses, stencils, transfers, stamps or the use of assembly line production. Instead it defines “authentic native handicrafts and clothing” as items “composed wholly or in some significant respect of natural materials, and which are produced, decorated or fashioned in the exercise of traditional native handicrafts without the use of pantographs, multiple carvers, or other mass copying devices.” The pantographs, multiple carvers or other mass copying devices relate to ivory carvers, not skin sewers. As noted by Rosita Worl, Ph.D., Vice Chair of the Board of Directors of Sealaska:

Alaska Natives have historically used patterns (stencils, transfers) for thousands of years in creating their traditional and customary clothing and handicrafts. Like other sewers who make clothing (shirts, vests, pants, coats, etc.) from fabric (cotton, linen, wool, polyester, etc.) or leather (cow, pig, sheep, deer, moose hides), the use of patterns helps to utilize the hide in an efficient manner and helps eliminate waste of the materials used in the construction of clothing. The USFWS' proposal to re-define the term "large-scale mass production" is discriminatory in the sense that non-Natives are allowed to use these same tools (stencils, transfers) for creating clothing, whereas the Alaska Natives will be criminalized for utilizing the same tools for creating and making authentic Alaska Native clothing and handicrafts from sea otters.

Sealaska Comments on USFWS Request for Public Comments on the "Draft Clarification of Select Terms Under the Marine Mammal Protection Act (MMPA) in Regard to Sea Otter," May 17, 2013.

The prohibition on the use of "embroidery machines" makes no sense – most modern sewing machines have an embroidery feature. Once again, the USFWS is attempting to limit what can be produced by Alaska Natives from sea otter pelts as a means of reducing the harvest of sea otters. The MMPA makes clear that the agency "does not have the authority to regulate the harvesting of sea otters for purposes of creating native handicrafts absent a finding of depletion." Didrickson, supra, 796 F. Supp at 1291 (emphasis added). By severely limiting what types of handicrafts can be made from sea otter, the USFWS runs afoul of the plain meaning of the MMPA, as well as the intent of Congress.

In closing, we urge the USFWS to adopt the definition of "significantly altered" that was created in conjunction with Alaska Natives by the IPCoMM Working Group in October 2012, and to reject the proposed "clarification" of the remaining terms. The definition of these terms proposed by USFWS in its March 1, 2013, notice only serve to create more confusion than currently exists.

Julie Kitka, President

Language developed by IPCoMM Work Group on "significantly altered"

Clarification of the term “significantly altered” by the hunters and handicrafters at the sea otter co-management workshop

October 10-12, 2012

A sea otter will be considered “significantly altered” when it is no longer recognizable as a whole sea otter hide, and has been made into a handicraft or article of clothing as is identified below:

1. a tanned dried, cured, or preserved sea otter hide, devoid of the head, feet, and tail, which includes any of the following but is not limited to weaving, carving, stitching, sewing, lacing, beading, drawing, painting, other decorative fashions, or made into another material or medium ;
2. tanned, dried, cured, or preserved sea otter head, tail, or feet, or other parts devoid of the remainder of the hide which includes any of the following but is not limited to weaving, carving, stitching, sewing, lacing, beading, drawing, or painting, other decorative fashions, or made into another material or medium.

2012 AFN CONVENTION

RESOLUTION 12-10

ALASKA FEDERATION OF NATIVES
TITLE:

SUPPORTING THE DEFINITION OF “SIGNIFICANTLY ALTERED” FOR THE PURPOSES OF SEA OTTER HANDICRAFT IN THE MARINE MAMMAL PROTECTION ACT TO PREVENT FURTHER OVERSEALOUS LAW ENFORCEMENT PRACTICES

- WHEREAS: The Indigenous People’s Council for Marine Mammals is a coalition of Native organizations formed for the purpose of identifying and addressing marine mammal issues of common concern; and
- WHEREAS: The Indigenous People’s Council for Marine Mammals has identified the regulatory language of “significantly altered” used by the United States Fish and Wildlife Service as vague and ambiguous; and
- WHEREAS: The Marine Mammal Protection Act was made law in 1972 prohibiting the take, import, and export of marine mammals by United States citizens; and
- WHEREAS: Section 101(b) was included in the Marine Mammal Protection Act to exempt coastal Indians, Aleuts, and Eskimo’s from these take prohibitions for subsistence and handicraft purposes; and
- WHEREAS: The Code of Federal Regulations (CFR) implementing the Marine Mammal Protection Act of 1972 includes the language “significantly altered” which has not been clearly defined and continues to be problematic for artists who wish to make a living through the sale of their handicrafts as which was originally intended by the Act; and
- WHEREAS: The indigenous residents of coastal communities have shared a close relationship with marine mammals for over 10,000 years as an essential element of the diet, social fabric, economy, and cultural well-being; and
- WHEREAS: The production of Marine Mammal handicrafts, garments or art whether traditional or contemporary, can be a significant revenue source for Alaska Natives who live in economically depressed communities; and
- WHEREAS: Cultural traditions and knowledge are in danger of being lost due to these unclear definitions; and

WHEREAS: The term “significantly altered” is not clearly defined by US Fish and Wildlife Service, leaving Alaska Natives and consumers of Native handicrafts, produced from sea otter, fearing that the items they buy and sell could be considered illegal.

NOW THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED by the Delegates to the 2012 Annual Convention of the Alaska Federation of Natives, Inc. petition the Secretary of Interior and the Director of the US Fish and Wildlife Service to adopt the language clarifying “significantly altered” for the purposes of sea otter handicrafts, upon concurrence by IPCOMM, as follows: consider a marine mammal product to be “significantly altered” when it is no longer recognizable as a whole hide. This includes 1) a tanned hide, devoid of head, feet, and tail which includes but is not limited to weaving, carving, stitching, sewing, lacing, beading, drawing, painting, other decorative fashions, or made into another material or medium, or 2) a tanned head, tail, feet or other part devoid of the remainder of the hide which is made into a handicraft using one the aforementioned processes.

Dear Director Dan Ashe:

I urge you to stop efforts to manage fisheries through the use of predator control by loosening the restrictions of what constitutes "significantly altered". I believe your current suggested revision to the definition of "significantly altered" as to what can be done to a sea otter pelt for handicraft purposes is too ambiguous. It is too broad and at odds with the Marine Mammal Protection Act and is being conducted without any environmental impact analysis. I am concerned that it will be easy to turn sea otter pelts into blankets and rugs with little modification. It is too broad and at odds with the MMPA and is being conducted without any environmental impact analysis.

I am afraid the FWS proposal would open up the general market to the commercialization of sea otter fur into mass-produced items like blankets and rugs by circumventing the requirement that sea otter fur be significantly altered before being sold to the general public.

In addition, the analysis to determine the true population status of sea otters in Southeast Alaska is just getting underway and questions as to whether the population is at optimum sustainable population levels and whether this population could be listed as "depleted" under the MMPA have yet to be determined. Until such time, FWS should not be allowing any process that could direct more harvest on sea otters in Alaska.

Please do not put forth a definition for "significantly altered" that will be less restrictive of what is made from sea otter pelts and that would put added hunting pressure on sea otters in Southeast Alaska and possibly elsewhere in Alaska.

Thank you for considering my comments.

Dear U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Dear Friends,

I write so many letters I;m not going to break down all the Biology Science in this one. You know you have Biologist working for you! But just a little basics think genetic variation, bottle neck recovery, carry capacities, food chains and other eco system cycles!

Please do not allow any further hunting of sea otters! Don't allow your pockets to be lined with $$ and sell out on your responsibilities. Why does it seem that the organizations suppose to protect us and our planet are back tracking (FDA, EPA, Fish and Wildlife, BLM, Ect.). Honestly commercial fishers don't need any more fish and the otters are not over eating the fish! And humans dont need otter pelts as handicrafts. I honestly even oppose Alaskan natives hunting the sea otters (and whales for that matter).

I love natives and lived in Alaska for several years. However I don't think being a "native" gives you more right to kill endangered or threatened species. Japan could use the culture excuse (and does constantly sighting Alaskan natives). People need to learn to live with in the earth systems not against them. If we fail to do so we will threaten our own survival as the systems collapse.

I oppose changes to the Marine Mammal Protection Act that would expand the definition of "handicraft" to include nearly unaltered sea otter pelts. Any definition of handicraft should be narrow enough to ensure that sea otters are allowed to recover and thrive.

Sea otters play an important role in Alaska's coastal ecosystems. They need to be protected, not treated as predators to be eradicated.

Thank you.

Amanda Terry

Reference: U.S. FWS Request for Public Comments on the "Draft Clarification of Select Terms Under the Marine Mammal Protection Act (MMPA) in Regard to Sea Otter..

Dear Ms. Mann,

In response to the U.S. FWS (Service) request for public comments on the "draft clarification of select terms under the MMPA in regards to sea otter", the Aleut Marine Mammal Commission (AMMC) submits the following comments as the proposed changes to the terms stated in the U.S. FWS notice will negatively affect the Aleut marine mammal subsistence hunters and handcrafters and all Alaska Natives subsistence users throughout Alaska.

The Service request for comment states the following:

Act in Regard to Sea Otters

The Marine Mammal Protection Act (MMPA) prohibits the take of marine mammals with certain exemptions. One such exemption exists for Alaska Natives who take marine mammals for the purpose of subsistence or for creating and selling authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing. The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service (Service) is seeking to clarify three terms used in the MMPA and implementing regulations (50 CFR Part 18) to reduce confusion about this exemption. The focus of this clarification is on sea otters due to the large number of questions the Service receives on this issue. We invite your comments on this draft document. If you need more information or would like to provide comments, please contact the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service Sea Otter Program, by electronic mail at (fw7_sea_otter_clarification@fws.gov) or by mail at the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, Marine Mammals Management Office, 1011 East Tudor Road, MS-341, Anchorage, Alaska 99503. The Service anticipates moving forward with finalizing the guidance in the next several months. Please provide your comments to the email or postal address above by the close of business on May 17, 2013.

1. Dwells on the Coast-Dwells on the coast refers to residing in Alaska and living permanently in an area or community that is adjacent to waters that are tidally influenced or in an area commonly inhabited and used by marine mammals.

The MMPA states: "Except as provided in section 1379 of this title, the provisions of this chapter shall not apply with respect to the taking of any marine mammal by any Indian, Aleut, or Eskimo who resides in Alaska and who dwells on the coast of the North Pacific Ocean or the Arctic Ocean if such taking -

(1) is for subsistence purposes; or

(2) is done for purposes of creating and selling authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing: Provided, That only authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing may be sold in interstate commerce: And provided further, That any edible portion of marine mammals may be sold in native villages and towns in Alaska or for native consumption. For the purposes of this subsection, the term "authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing" means items composed wholly or in some significant respect of natural materials, and which are produced, decorated, or fashioned in the exercise of traditional native handicrafts without the use of pantographs, multiple carvers, or other mass copying devices. Traditional native handicrafts include, but are not limited to weaving, carving, stitching, sewing, lacing, beading, drawing and painting; and

(3) in each case, is not accomplished in a wasteful manner."

AMMC comments and questions regarding the proposed clarification of the term "dwells on the coast":

1. The Act states "dwells on the coast of the North Pacific Ocean or the Arctic Ocean" The MMPA does not state "reside permanently" on the coast? What is the intent and purpose behind the Service "new" terms to require an Indian, Aleut, Eskimo, to "reside permanently" in an area that is "tidally influenced", "area commonly inhabited and used by marine mammals"?
2. How will "living permanently" be determined by FWS law enforcement?
3. Will the Service have maps available for the Alaska Tribes and the Alaska Native subsistence hunters and users that outline the approved areas described as "adjacent to waters that are tidally influenced" or "area commonly inhabited" or "used by marine mammals"?
4. What are "tidally influenced areas" and do they include major river systems that marine mammals are known to inhabit from time to time?
5. The "new" definition proposed by the Service for "dwells on the coast" re-defines the language contained in the MMPA and places additional restrictions not required by the MMPA and places an unnecessary burden on the Indian, Aleut, Eskimo marine mammal subsistence users.
6. The U.S Constitution authorizes Congress to enact federal law. Which federal law authorizes the Service to re-define the terms contained in the MMPA and to enforce those "new" terms and restrictions upon Alaska Natives?

The Service request for comment states the following:

2. Large-scale Mass Production.-Large-scale mass production refers to the use of mass copying devices such as pantographs, multiple carvers, embroidery machines, cutting presses, stencils, transfers, stamps, and/or the use of assembly line production. The formation of traditional Native groups or cooperatives and the use of modern implements such as sewing machines are permitted. However, there can be no manufacturing on a large-scale by means of extensive mechanization or division of labor, such as using a standardized pattern on a large-scale.

The original language of Section 101(b) states: "is done for purposes of creating and selling authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing: Provided, That only authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing may be sold in interstate commerce: And provided further, That any edible portion of marine mammals may be sold in native villages and towns in Alaska or for native consumption. For the purposes of this subsection, the term "authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing" means items composed wholly or in some significant respect of natural materials, and which are produced, decorated, or fashioned in the exercise of traditional native handicrafts without the use of pantographs, multiple carvers, or other mass copying devices. Traditional native handicrafts include, but are not limited to weaving, carving, stitching, sewing, lacing, beading, drawing and painting;"

AMMC comments and questions regarding the proposed clarification of the term "Large-scale Mass Production":

1. The MMPA states; "without the use of pantographs, multiple carvers, or other mass copying devices"; the language of the MMPA does not state the use of "embroidery machines, cutting presses, stencils, transfers, stamps, and or the use of assembly line production". The pantographs, multiple carvers or other mass copying devices relate to ivory carvers, not skin sewers. Alaska Natives have historically used patterns (stencils, transfers) for thousands of years in creating their traditional and customary clothing and handicrafts. Like other sewers who make clothing (shirts, vests, pants, coats, etc.) from fabric (cotton, linen, wool, polyester, etc.) or leather (cow, pig, sheep, deer, moose hides); the use of patterns helps to utilize the hide in an efficient manner and helps eliminate waste of the materials used in the construction of clothing. The Service's proposal to re-define the term "large-scale, mass production" is discriminatory in the sense that non-natives are allowed to use these same tools (stencils, transfers) for creating clothing, whereas the Alaska Natives will be criminalized for utilizing the same tools for creating and making authentic Alaska Native clothing and handcrafts from sea otters.
2. The MMPA clearly describes what is considered large-scale mass production. The new definition proposed by the Service continues to usurp the intent of the MMPA to allow and protect the Alaska Native way of life and their ability to continue their traditional and customary practices in creating authentic Alaska Native clothing and handcrafts, and places additional restrictions and burdens upon the subsistence hunters and users not intended by the MMPA.

3. What has prompted the Service to make the determination, as described in the new definition language, that Alaska Natives cannot utilize an "embroidery machine" in making clothing or handicraft items? An "Embroidery machine" is basically a "sewing" machine and allowed under Section 101(b) of the MMPA (see "sewing"). The Service may want to take into consideration, that newer model sewing machines also have the capacity to do embroidery stitching. If an Alaska Native were to use one of the newer model sewing machines, would they then be breaking the law and subject to enforcement measures?

4. Which federal law authorizes and gives the Service the ability to pick and choose which "sewing" machinery can or cannot be used by Alaska Natives in the construction of clothing or handcrafts? What is the selection criteria and process for making this determination? Where can a person find this information?

The Service request for comment states the following:

a. In order to be considered significantly altered from its natural form, a tanned, dried, cured, or preserved part of a sea otter hide, devoid only of the head, feet, and tail (i.e., blocked), or any other remaining parts of the hide, must be substantially changed through means including, but not limited to: weaving, carving, stitching, sewing, lacing, beading, drawing, painting, or other handcrafting methods. Examples of significantly altered items include those items typically known as: mitten; hats; neck rolls; gloves; mukluks; purses; and blankets or scarves made from a hide or pieces of hide with a backing or lining and stitched around the edges.

b. Items will not be considered significantly altered from their natural form where merely minimal changes have been made to a hide devoid only of the head, feet, and tail (i.e., blocked), and where those items can be easily converted back to an unaltered piece of hide. Examples of items not considered to be significantly altered include: a cape that consists of a large hide with a single button neck closure; a hide that has been drawn on with a marker; a blanket with a few stitches.

Section 101 (b)(2) of the MMPA states: "(2) is done for purposes of creating and selling authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing: Provided, That only authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing may be sold in interstate commerce: And provided further, That any edible portion of marine mammals may be sold in native villages and towns in Alaska or for native consumption. For the purposes of this subsection, the term "authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing" means items composed wholly or in some significant respect of natural materials, and which are produced, decorated, or fashioned in the exercise of traditional native handicrafts without the use of pantographs, multiple carvers, or other mass copying devices. Traditional native handicrafts include, but are not limited to weaving, carving, stitching, sewing, lacing, beading, drawing and painting;

AMMC comments and questions regarding the proposed clarification of the term "significantly altered".

1. The original language contained in the MMPA provides the meaning for "authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing" as follows, it states; "means items composed wholly or in some significant respect of natural materials". Nowhere in the text of the MMPA does it include the term "significantly altered". This is a term created and defined by the agency, not the Act. Neither, Congress or the MMPA require Alaska Natives to "significantly alter" sea otter hides prior to the use of the hide being used to create and make authentic Alaska Native clothing or handcrafts. The only entity trying to impose this restrictive terminology is the Service, which re-defines the purpose and intent of the MMPA.

2. In October 2012, IPCoMM facilitated a workshop for the Service. The workshop was held to invite Alaska Native subsistence hunters and handcrafters of sea otter, draft language to clarify the term "significantly altered" as it relates to sea otters. The workshop was attended by Alaska Native subsistence sea otter hunters and handcrafters from villages across the range inhabited by sea otters. The term "significantly altered" is a term contained in FWS regulations and used by the Service to implement Section 101(b) of the MMPA. During the workshop Alaska Native participants provided clarification of this term as understood by the Alaska Native hunters, handcrafters' and Service personnel. The Service told the participants that the draft language would be reviewed by the FWS Solicitors office, and any minor changes made to the draft language would be provided to the participants prior to the Service going out for comment of the "draft" language defining the term "significantly altered". The original language created by the Alaska Native subsistence hunters and handcrafters can be found in AFN Resolution #12-10, adopted by the entire body of tribal delegates who attended the October 2012 AFN convention. The language being solicited for public comment is NOT the language developed by the Alaska Native participants! To date, the Service has not followed through with their promise to the participants, of sharing the "minor changes" with them prior to soliciting comments from the public. Instead, it appears the Service has taken it upon themselves to draft their own version of the definition for "significantly altered" and is now soliciting comment from the tribes and public without full background information about the process that had taken place prior to going out for public comments. These actions by the Service not only questions the integrity and trustworthiness of the Service, but the motives for their actions when dealing with the Alaska Native right afforded them under the MMPA in order to continue their way of life, harvesting and using sea otters for subsistence purposes.

3. The proposed language changes made by the Service do not support intent or language contained in the MMPA and passed by Congress. Instead, the "new" clarification of the term "significantly altered" is vague, confusing and further misinterpretation by law enforcement officers. The proposed clarification language places additional restrictions, not originally contained in the MMPA, upon the Alaska Native subsistence users, which was not intended by Congress and the passage of Section 101(b) of the MMPA.

Closing questions and comments:

1. Question: Under which federal law does the Service get its authority to develop, enact and enforce new laws without the approval and oversight of Congress?
2. Question: Is the Service following the federal guidelines, policy and procedures in drafting the "clarifying language for the terms; "Dwells on the coast", "Large-scale Mass Production", and "Significantly Altered"?"
3. Question: Is the Service following federal guidelines, policy and protocols for soliciting public comment on the proposed clarification language? If not, which guidelines, policy or protocol is the Service using?
4. Question: If approved, how will the proposed changes to these three terms impact Alaska Native hunters and handcrafters who take and use sea otters and other marine mammal species such as polar bear and walrus?
5. Question: Has the Service advised or consulted with the NMFS on the proposed clarification language?
6. Question: If approved, how will the new definitions influence the interpretation of these same terms defined differently in NMFS regulations?
7. Question: What specifically prompted the Service to re-define these terms?

At the beginning of the U.S.FWS Notice for public comment, it states; "to reduce confusion about this exemption". The intent of the MMPA is to protect the Alaska Native way of life and the ability for Alaska Natives to continue their traditional and customary use of the marine mammal resources they depend upon for subsistence. The language stated in 101(b) is clear and straightforward in its terms as they apply to creating clothing and handicrafts from marine mammals. The real issue it appears is the interpretation of the language contained in the Act (MMPA) by the U.S. FWS marine mammal management and enforcement staff.

Throughout the years the Service has asked the Alaska Native Marine Mammal Organizations (ANO) to review other clarifying language changes proposed by the Service, in order for them to implement and enforce provisions of the MMPA, specifically "significantly altered". The ANO's provided the Service with detailed feedback then, on how the proposed changes did not support the intent of the MMPA and the fact that the changes were more restrictive, burdensome, confusing and subject to more misinterpretation. Now the Service is again asking for comment on language that will supposedly: "reduce confusion about the exemption". However, the proposed language, again fails to support the intent of the MMPA to protect the Alaska Native subsistence way of life, and creates more restrictions, burden, confusion, misinterpretation of the language, and enforcement measures.

It is unsettling to witness the efforts undertaken by the Service to continually attempt to change the definitions of terms contained in regulation in order to undermine the intent of the MMPA. The MMPA was enacted by Congress to "protect the Alaska Native way of life". The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, is mandated to uphold the laws, not to re-write them. The proposed "clarification" language DOES NOT reduce confusion about this exemption. In fact, it only serves to implement additional restriction and enforcement measures on the Alaska Native marine mammal subsistence users and undermines the Alaska Native way of life! Therefore, the Aleut Marine Mammal Commission comprised of the eleven Aleut tribes of; Akutan, Atka, Belkofski, False Pass, King Cove, Nelson Lagoon, Nikolski, Sanak, Sand Point, Unalaska, and Unga; and representing the Aleut and Alaska Native marine mammal subsistence users from these tribes, DO NOT SUPPORT and OPPOSES the "clarifying" language to re-define the terms; "dwells on the coast", "large-scale mass production", and "significantly altered".

Sincerely,

Aleut Marine Mammal Commission

Dear Sir,

Alaska Representative Donald Young has introduced a bill to restart the fur trade of northern sea otters. Bill (H.R. 2714), seeks To amend the Marine Mammal Protection Act of 1972 to allow the transport, purchase, and sale of pelts of, and handicrafts, garments, and art produced from, Southcentral and Southeast Alaska northern sea otters.

The International Union for Conservation of Nature still lists the sea otter as an endangered species, and describes the most significant threat to sea otters as oil pollution from, oil spills. The Exxon Valdez oil spill of 24 March 1989 killed thousands of sea otters and the lingering oil in the area continues to affect the population.

All sea otters are protected under the Marine Mammal Protection Act which makes it illegal to hunt a sea otter or sell any products made from the body of a sea otter, unless the sea otter is harvested by an Alaskan Native for subsistence purposes.

The population growth of the Northern sea otter is near an all-time low and harvest rates have more than doubled in the last few years. With the ever looming threat of Alaska oil drilling, this is no time to even consider removing the sea otter from current protections.

I urge you to oppose changes to weaken current protections of Alaska's sea otters.

Sincerely,

This is being submitted on behalf of the Bristol Bay Marine Mammal Council, at their request at their May 16, 2013 Face - to - Face meeting in Dillingham, Alaska.

At the May 16, 2013 BBMMC face to face meeting, the Council moved and acted to not support the proposed clarification language regarding "significantly altered," "dwells on the coast" and "mass production."

Bristol Bay Council Executive Council tribal members from inland have traditional and historically traveled to coastal communities to harvest sea otters and other marine mammals. The 50-mile coastal dwelling will be a hardship for inland tribes who hunt all marine mammal species including sea otters.

The significantly altered definition does not apply to Bristol Bay tribes, since time immemorial, our Alaska Native ancestors have passed on traditional Native family ancestral patterns for sea otter handicrafts to their families. We believe that the proposed clarification language is inconsistent with our traditions and customary ways and cannot support this language.

Dear Director Dan Ashe, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service:

As long time supporters of Friends of the Sea Otter, we urge you to stop efforts to manage fisheries through the use of predator control by loosening the restrictions of what constitutes "significantly altered". We believe your current suggested revision to the definition of "significantly altered" as to what can be done to a sea otter pelt for handicraft purposes is too ambiguous. It is too broad and at odds with the Marine Mammal Protection Act and is being conducted without any environmental impact analysis. We are concerned that it will be easy to turn sea otter pelts into blankets and rugs with little modification.

We are afraid the FWS proposal would open up the general market to the commercialization of sea otter fur into mass-produced items like blankets and rugs by circumventing the requirement that sea otter fur be significantly altered before being sold to the general public.

Dear Director Dan Ashe, U.S. Fish & Wildlife Service:

At the risk of sounding "ignorant" by the standards of those involved in the Fisheries industry in Alaska, I am requesting that efforts to increase sea otter harvest be stopped until further studies can be completed. The ocean is an ecosystem and each element of it serves a purpose and is self balancing. Short term abnormalities in fish take should not be treated with drastic measures that significantly alter the seas. Increasing take of otters may solve this short term shortage, but likely one major reason why otter levels were unnaturally low to start with was the long history of otter slaughter and trade. We do not need to go down this road again...

I urge you to stop efforts to manage fisheries through the use of predator control by loosening the restrictions of what constitutes "significantly altered". I believe your current suggested revision to the definition of "significantly altered" as to what can be done to a sea otter pelt for handicraft purposes is too ambiguous. I am concerned that it will be easy to turn sea otter pelts into blankets and rugs with little modification. It is too broad and at odds with the MMPA and is being conducted without any environmental impact analysis.

I am afraid the FWS proposal would open up the general market to the commercialization of sea otter fur into mass-produced items like blankets and rugs by circumventing the requirement that sea otter fur be significantly altered before being sold to the general public.

In addition, the analysis to determine the true population status of sea otters in Southeast Alaska is just getting underway and questions as to whether the population is at optimum sustainable population levels and whether this population could be listed as "depleted" under the MMPA have yet to be determined. Until such time, FWS should not be allowing any process that could direct more harvest on sea otters in Alaska.

Please do not put forth a definition for "significantly altered" that will be less restrictive of what is made from sea otter pelts and that would put added hunting pressure on sea otters in Southeast Alaska and possibly elsewhere in Alaska.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Bob Gengler

Regarding sea otter harvesting in southeast Alaska

Dear Mr. Ashe,

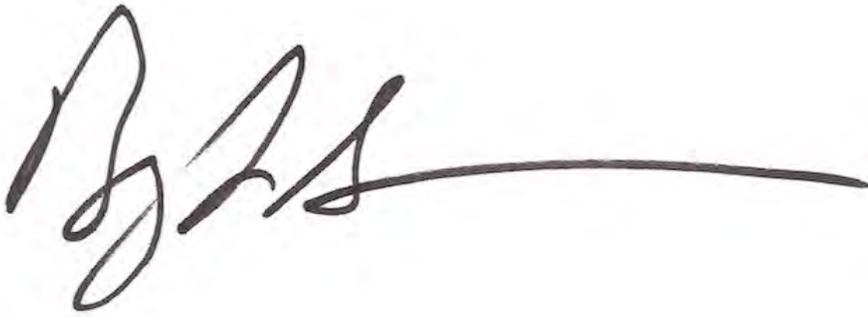

I am writing to ask you to retain appropriately restrictive language regarding what makes it permissible for anyone to harvest, sell, or otherwise profit from anything made from the body or fur of a sea otter. Under the Marine Mammal Protection Act (MMPA), sea otters are protected from all hunting or other injury by humans, except when harvested by an Alaskan Native for subsistence purposes. Even Alaskan Natives cannot profit from sale of sea otter body parts unless they have been used first for subsistence purposes and only secondarily made into some kind of traditional artifact or handicraft. These rules are sensible and sound, and they must not be diluted or distorted at this time, when global biodiversity is so imperiled.

I understand that fishing groups claim that the sea otter population in southeast Alaska is responsible for diminishing fisheries, but these claims are unsubstantiated. Your proposed revision of requirements that are in accordance with the spirit and letter of the MMPA is improper management and, further, no solution to the fishing groups' concerns. Your easing these regulations will merely encourage greater harvesting of the officially threatened otter species in southcentral and southwest Alaska, which would be in conflict with the intentions of the Endangered Species Act and would undo progress made in the past decades in bringing back this species from near extinction.

Please do not put forth a definition for "significantly altered" that will be less restrictive regarding what can be made from sea otter pelts, less restrictive either directly or because of ambiguity in proposed revised wording. Doing so could lead to increased harvest of sea otters in Alaska for the sale of sea otter pelts as blankets, rugs, or other ornaments, a change which is decidedly not in concert with the MMPA. Analysis to determine the true population status of sea otters in southeast Alaska is just now underway, and questions as to whether the population is at optimum sustainable population levels and whether this population could be listed as "depleted" under the MMPA have yet to be determined. You open yourself and others up to serious lawsuits for promoting practices at odds with the MMPA without proper environmental impact analyses.

I hope you'll take this plea seriously and continue to act in accordance with the Marine Mammal Protection Act. Thank you.

Sincerely,

Alaska's Sea Otters

Hello,

I encourage the FWS to not weaken protections for sea otters under the Marine Mammal Protection Act. In particular, I urge you to not loosen the definition of "significantly altered" that would result in increased hunting pressure.

Alaska's sea otters have made tremendous progress over the past few decades, please do not risk undoing this with misguided attempts to change the law.

Dear Director Dan Ashe, U.S. Fish & Wildlife Service:

I urge you to stop efforts to manage fisheries through the use of predator control by loosening the restrictions of what constitutes "significantly altered". I believe your current suggested revision to the definition of "significantly altered" as to what can be done to a sea otter pelt for handicraft purposes is too ambiguous. It is too broad and at odds with the Marine Mammal Protection Act and is being conducted without any environmental impact analysis. I am concerned that it will be easy to turn sea otter pelts into blankets and rugs with little modification. It is too broad and at odds with the MMPA and is being conducted without any environmental impact analysis.

Dear U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Hey, I have a bright idea...why don't we leave the otters alone. Even the term "handicraft" suggests that a living, breathing sentient being is nothing but a product or some type of "material" to be exploited for human use and recreation in a creative craft or hobby. I don't prefer the term "handicraft" nor do I like the way the term is expanded in the Marine Mammal Protection Act to include nearly unaltered sea otter pelts. Some humans have the arrogance to believe that they know what is in the best interest of other species, create all kinds of justifiable killings in the name of "population" control, and somehow believe that Mother Nature needs help in managing species, their ecosystems, and the environment. It would be interesting to see what would happen if we removed ourselves from the picture and gave Mother Nature back her job.

Sea otters play an important role in Alaska's coastal ecosystems. They need to be protected, not treated as products or predators to be eradicated.

Thank you.

Dear U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

I urge you to keep the definition of the term "handicraft" within its original integrity - which was to preserve the traditional rights of Native peoples to express their cultural and historical relationship to the land and wildlife.

This protection is NOT meant to be extended to the commercial fishing industry. This is a gross and obscene distortion of the intent of the original ruling.

When our laws are intentionally bent to accommodate those who seek profit at the expense of the defenseless, it puts not only sea otters at risk, but our entire democracy and the rule of law on which it depends.

Thank you for your consideration.

Sea Otter Program
Marine Mammals Management Office
U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
1011 East Tudor Road
Anchorage, AK 99503

To whom it concerns,

Alaska Representative Donald Young has introduced a bill to restart the fur trade of northern sea otters. Bill (H.R. 2714), seeks To amend the Marine Mammal Protection Act of 1972 to allow the transport, purchase, and sale of pelts of, and handicrafts, garments, and art produced from, Southcentral and Southeast Alaska northern sea otters.

The International Union for Conservation of Nature still lists the sea otter as an endangered species, and describes the most significant threat to sea otters as oil pollution from, oil spills. The Exxon Valdez oil spill of 24 March 1989 killed thousands of sea otters and the lingering oil in the area continues to affect the population.

All sea otters are protected under the Marine Mammal Protection Act which makes it illegal to hunt a sea otter or sell any products made from the body of a sea otter, unless the sea otter is harvested by an Alaskan Native for subsistence purposes.

The population growth of the Northern sea otter is near an all-time low and harvest rates have more than doubled in the last few years. With the ever looming threat of Alaska oil drilling, this is no time to even consider removing the sea otter from current protections.

I urge you to oppose changes to weaken current protections of Alaska's sea otters.

Sincerely,

Dear Ms. Carol Torsen:

The 78th Tribal Assembly of the Central Council of the Tlingit and Haida Indian Tribes of Alaska (Central Council) convened in Juneau, Alaska on April 17-20, 2013, and adopted resolution TA 13-26, Supporting the Definition of “Significantly Altered” for the Purposes of Sea Otter Handicraft in the Marine Mammal Protection Act. Central Council hereby submit the attached resolution to IPCoMM in support of language developed by IPCoMM clarifying “significantly altered” for the purposes of sea otter handicrafts, upon concurrence by IPCoMM.

The Tribal Assembly is the governing body of Central Council comprised of 132 delegates representing over 28,000 Tlingit and Haida Indians nationwide. The Tribal Assembly adopted resolutions that address the concerns of tribes, communities, and tribal citizens with regard to matters of health, human services, and governmental affairs. Resolutions adopted during Tribal Assembly are official tribal policy position issues and I respectfully request your assistance to ensure that the issues and concerns of our tribal citizens are addressed in a positive manner.

CENTRAL COUNCIL OF TLINGIT AND HAIDA INDIAN TRIBES OF ALASKA
Seventy-Eighth Annual Tribal Assembly
April 17-20, 2013
Juneau, Alaska

Resolution TA/ 13-26

Title: Supporting the Definition of "Significantly Altered" for the Purposes of Sea Otter Handicraft in the Marine Mammal Protection Act

By: Sitka Delegate Gerry Hope

WHEREAS, Central Council of Tlingit and Haida Indian Tribes of Alaska (Central Council) is a federally recognized tribe of more than 28,000 tribal citizens; and

WHEREAS, traditional Alaska Native hunters and artists within Alaska, including Ketchikan, Klawock, Sitka, Angoon, Hoonah and Yakutat developed and supported the language that was presented to the Indigenous People's Council on Marine Mammals (IPCOMM) and the Alaska Federation of Natives (AFN); and

WHEREAS, IPCOMM is a coalition of Native organizations formed for the purpose of identifying and addressing marine mammal issues of common concern; and

WHEREAS, IPCOMM has identified the regulatory language of "significantly altered" used by the United States Fish and Wildlife Service (USFWS) as vague and ambiguous; and

WHEREAS, the Marine Mammal Protection Act was made law in 1972 prohibiting the take, import, and export of marine mammals by United States citizens; and

WHEREAS, Section 101(b) was included in the Marine Mammal Protection Act to exempt coastal Indians, Aleuts, and Eskimos from these take prohibitions for subsistence and handicraft purposes; and

WHEREAS, the Code of Federal Regulations (CFR) implementing the Marine Mammal Protection Act of 1972 includes the language "significantly altered" which has not been clearly defined and continues to be problematic for artists who wish to make a living through the sale of their handicrafts as which was originally intended by the Act; and

WHEREAS, the indigenous residents of coastal communities have shared a close relationship with marine mammals for over 10,000 years as an essential element of the diet, social fabric, economy, and cultural well-being; and

WHEREAS, the production of marine mammal handicrafts, garments or art whether traditional or contemporary, can be significant revenue source for Alaska Natives who live in economically depressed communities; and

WHEREAS, cultural traditions and knowledge are in danger of being lost due to these unclear definitions; and

WHEREAS, the term "significantly altered" is not clearly defined by USFWS, leaving Alaska Natives and consumers of Native handicrafts produced from sea otter, fearing that the items they buy and sell could be considered illegal; and

WHEREAS, the USFWS has proposed separate and substantially different language, from what was proposed by Alaska Native hunters, sewers, IPCOMM and AFN, on the definition of "significantly altered", "mass production", and "coastal Native".

NOW THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED, that the Seventy-Eighth Tribal Assembly of Central Council of Tlingit and Haida Indian Tribes of Alaska convened in Juneau, Alaska on April 17-20, 2013, hereby rejects the USFWS proposed language on what is "significantly altered", "mass production" and "coastal Native"; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED, the Central Council supports the language definition developed in the IPCOMM workshop held on October 12, 2012 in Anchorage, Alaska; and

BE IT FINALLY RESOLVED, the Central Council shall petition the Secretary of Interior and the director of the USFWS to adopt the language developed in the IPCOMM workshop clarifying "significantly altered" for the purposes of sea otter handicrafts, upon concurrence by IPCOMM, as follows:

Consider a marine mammal product to be "significantly altered" when it is no longer recognizable as a whole hide. This includes:

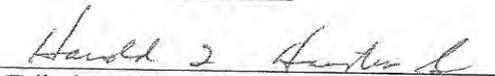

1. a tanned hide, devoid of head, feet, and tail which includes but is not limited to weaving, carving, stitching, sewing, lacings, beading, drawing, painting, other decorative fashions, or made into another material or medium, or
2. a tanned head, tail, feet or other part devoid of the remainder of the hide which is made into a handicraft using one of the aforementioned processes.

ADOPTED this 20th day of April 2013, by the Seventy- Eighth Tribal Assembly of Central Council of Tlingit and Haida Indian Tribes of Alaska.

RE: Comments regarding USFWS draft clarification of select terms under the Marine Mammal Protection Act (MMPA) in regard to sea otters

Dear USFWS Sea Otter Program Staff:

The City of Craig offers the following comments regarding the above referenced item.

The city has read comments on this matter submitted by the Alaska Ocean Cluster and the Southeast Alaska Dive Fisheries Association. We concur with their comments.

The city calls special attention to comments from the Alaska Ocean Cluster regarding the fact that the otter population is expanding so rapidly that it is decimating the shellfish populations in Southeast Alaska, and that an ecosystem management plan is needed to avoid a crash of the shellfish populations and, consequently, the otter population. The decimation of the shellfish populations has been documented by commercial divers, fishermen, subsistence users and dive biologists at the Alaska Dept. of Fish & Game. If the growth of the sea otter population is not reduced, not only will all commercial shellfish harvests in SEA be closed, but also sport, personal use and subsistence harvests will end, and the otter population will eventually crash as a result.

At the same time we wish to expressly support SARDFA comments as to application of the regulations relative to the "significantly altered" language. Like SARDFA, the City of Craig believes that this new draft guidance does very little to increase the ability of Alaskan coastal natives to increase their harvest of sea otters. We support SARDFA's suggestion to delete the reference to significantly altered and instead enforce the MMPA language that states "Traditional native handicrafts include, but are not limited to weaving, carving, stitching, sewing, lacing, beading, drawing and painting." We agree that it is not the job of the agency to try and restrict the allowable uses to protect the sea otters but to allow the Alaskan Natives an opportunity to engage in commerce producing authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing to facilitate their independence while participating in a traditional cultural practice.

City of Craig
Comments on MMPA Regulation Change
May 17, 2013

As SARDFa points out, USFWS is on record as stating that the harvest of sea otters in Southeast Alaska could be as many as 2,500 animals without harming the existing population of 27,500 sea otters. Presently 400 to 800 are harvested on an annual basis. We encourage USFWS to work with Tribal interests to substantially increase the present level of harvest.

We also echo SARDFa's request that the USFWS acknowledge the impact of sea otters on the commercial, subsistence, and personal use of sea cucumber, sea urchin, geoduck clam and Dungeness crab, with the ultimate goal of an ecosystem-based sea otter management plan benefiting all users of these resources and protecting the resources from depletion.

Dear U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

I am writing to express my opposition to the proposed changes to the Marine Mammal Protection Act. These alternations would expand the definition of "handicraft" to include sea otter pelts that have undergone very little human alteration. The Act's definition of handicraft should be focused enough to ensure that sea otters thrive as a species.

Sea otters play an important role in Alaska's coastal ecosystems. They require protection.

Thank you.

You MUST protect the sea otters totally because they already are struggling to survive due to pollution, decreased habitat, and contaminated water and help. DON't do anything that will result in additional harassment and potential depletion of this prominent and very important sea mammal. The ecosystem will be damaged with depletion of this wonderful icon. Thankyou for your consideration! Dorothy McCorkle

Dear Director Ashe:

I write to strongly urge you to stop efforts to manage fisheries through the use of predator control by loosening the restrictions of what constitutes "significantly altered". I believe your current suggested revision to the definition of "significantly altered" as to what can be done to a sea otter pelt for handicraft purposes is too ambiguous. It is too broad and at odds with the Marine Mammal Protection Act and is being conducted without any environmental impact analysis. I am concerned that it will be easy to turn sea otter pelts into blankets and rugs with little modification. It is too broad and at odds with the MMPA and is being conducted without any environmental impact analysis.

I am afraid the FWS proposal would open up the general market to the commercialization of sea otter fur into mass-produced items like blankets and rugs by circumventing the requirement that sea otter fur be significantly altered before being sold to the general public.

In addition, the analysis to determine the true population status of sea otters in Southeast Alaska is just getting underway and questions as to whether the population is at optimum sustainable population levels and whether this population could be listed as "depleted" under the MMPA have yet to be determined. Until such time, FWS should not be allowing any process that could direct more harvest on sea otters in Alaska.

Please do not put forth a definition for "significantly altered" that will be less restrictive of what is made from sea otter pelts and that would put added hunting pressure on sea otters in Southeast Alaska and possibly elsewhere in Alaska.

Thank you for considering my views.

Sincerely,

Doug Lenier

Dear U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

As you know, the way our freedoms exist in the US is due to the laws in place.

Same with Sea Otters -- to remove the hard-fought laws is to go back to square one.

I am adding my name to these emails to bring to light this issue among the many that you are juggling.

So glad you are in a position to continue the freedoms and protections of this land's inhabitants.

Respectfully,
Elaine Capogeannis

10,000 years in our Traditional Homeland, Prince William Sound, the Copper River Delta, & the Gulf of Alaska

Native Village of Eyak's Response to: 'Draft Clarification of Select Terms Under the Marine Mammal Protection Act in Regard to Sea Otters'

The term “significantly altered” has long been in need of clarification by the United States Fish and Wildlife Service (Service), the federal agency responsible for managing the harvest of marine mammals under the native exemption from the harvest moratorium mandated in the Marine Mammal Protection Act (MMPA).

The Native Village of Eyak (NVE) is a federally recognized tribe seated in Cordova, Alaska, whose Tribal members have traditionally harvested marine mammals, including sea otters, for over 10,000 years. Maintaining the requirement that traditional handcrafts made from marine mammal resources be “significantly altered” is important. Should this requirement be diminished, we risk whole sea otter pelts being sold (by modestly stitching several pelts together and selling it as a blanket) in large numbers to mass producers. This would drive prices down in the medium to long term, requiring native hunters and craftspeople whose income is generated by or supplemented by sea otter harvest to take more animals to generate steady income.

NVE supports the Service's efforts to clarify the term “significantly altered,” however recent draft language falls short of making this term clear enough to ensure that it is interpreted consistently by all law enforcement officers, and applied equally to all native hunters and craftspeople. The current draft language leaves much to interpretation by law enforcement officers, and we would like language that provides law enforcement with clear definitions of what is allowable and not allowable under the native exemption from the MMPA. However, NVE agrees with the spirit of the draft clarification and would like that intention to be preserved in further efforts to clarify this term.

One issue that is ripe for variable interpretation is the phrase: “devoid only of the head, feet, and tail.” While we appreciate that the Service's intention is to indicate that this modification to a raw hide alone does not constitute a significantly altered hide, it could easily be interpreted that a hide must be devoid of the head, feet, and tail, which have caused many native craftspeople to forego using these body parts when they would otherwise wish to. This is perceived as mandating that a harvest be conducted in a wasteful manner (as these parts were traditionally used), which is in conflict with regulations regarding this harvest exemption for natives requiring that these harvests be conducted “in a non-wasteful manner.”

NVE is eager to work with the Service in developing language that preserve the spirit and intention of the draft language now under review, that leaves less room for interpretation by law enforcement, and does not conflict with our traditional ethic of conducting non-wasteful harvests, which is clearly mandated in 16 USC § 1371.

Dear Director Dan Ashe, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service:

As long time supporters of Friends of the Sea Otter, we urge you to stop efforts to manage fisheries through the use of predator control by loosening the restrictions of what constitutes "significantly altered". We believe your current suggested revision to the definition of "significantly altered" as to what can be done to a sea otter pelt for handicraft purposes is too ambiguous. It is too broad and at odds with the Marine Mammal Protection Act and is being conducted without any environmental impact analysis. We are concerned that it will be easy to turn sea otter pelts into blankets and rugs with little modification.

We are afraid the FWS proposal would open up the general market to the commercialization of sea otter fur into mass-produced items like blankets and rugs by circumventing the requirement that sea otter fur be significantly altered before being sold to the general public.

Dear Sir,

Alaska Representative Donald Young has introduced a bill to restart the fur trade of northern sea otters. Bill (H.R. 2714), seeks To amend the Marine Mammal Protection Act of 1972 to allow the transport, purchase, and sale of pelts of, and handicrafts, garments, and art produced from, Southcentral and Southeast Alaska northern sea otters. The International Union for Conservation of Nature still lists the sea otter as an endangered species, and describes the most significant threat to sea otters as oil pollution from, oil spills. The Exxon Valdez oil spill of 24 March 1989 killed thousands of sea otters and the lingering oil in the area continues to affect the population. All sea otters are protected under the Marine Mammal Protection Act which makes it illegal to hunt a sea otter or sell any products made from the body of a sea otter, unless the sea otter is harvested by an Alaskan Native for subsistence purposes.

The population growth of the Northern sea otter is near an all-time low and harvest rates have more than doubled in the last few years. With the ever looming threat of Alaska oil drilling, this is no time to even consider removing the sea otter from current protections.

I urge you to oppose changes to weaken current protections of Alaska's sea otters.

Dear U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

As our numbers and actions become threats to the continued passing of this world in its present state from one generation to the next we must think of how our children and generations of theirs after them will cope with a natural world possibly devoid of many of the creatures and habitats that we hold dear. There is *no* greater bequest from one generation to its successors than a natural world as intact and as varied and as wild as it is possible to leave it. To deplete species extant for eons merely to enhance the profit margins of commercial fishing interests is anathema to all that is decent in the world.

Thus, I oppose changes to the Marine Mammal Protection Act that would expand the definition of "handicraft" to include nearly unaltered sea otter pelts. Any definition of handicraft should be narrow enough to ensure that sea otters are allowed to recover and thrive.

Sea Otter Rulemaking Comments

fred@kasaan.org <fred@kasaan.org>

Fri, May 17, 2013 at 4:03 PM

To: Crystal_Leonetti@fws.gov, verena_gill@fws.gov

To US Fish & Wildlife Service,

Present sea otter law presents a Civil Rights issue as well as Traditional Commerce hindrances.

The current laws and regulations regarding the harvest and use of sea otters keep Alaska Natives from fully realizing any economic opportunity and prevent the maintenance of a sustainable sea otter population.

The law requires a blood quantum of 1/4 in order to be considered Native. However, Tribes should establish who their members are. To fulfill its trust obligations, the US Government should honor Native Self Governance.

Present law serves to criminalize aspects of our Native Way of Life without cause.

Remember, there is no harvest limitation on sea otter for Native hunters. Pelts must be tagged. By The Governments own estimation, 15% of the sea otter population should be cut in order to maintain a sustainable population. They estimate a population in Southeast Alaska of 25,000 sea otters. Many consider this a very low estimate. Nevertheless, 3,750 sea otter would need to be killed in order to maintain sustainability. Of course, that number does not get harvested each year.

The concept of "significantly altered" remains central to the stumbling block nature of current law.

A sea otter in its natural form is much more than its hide. Let's call one Benny. Benny swims around, thinking and breathing and eating all day. Benny plays. Benny might have sex. Benny lives a good life.

Benny is very attached to his hide in his natural form. Benny floats around on his back, eating, eating, eating. Benny poses for calendar photos every year. Benny eats one third his body weight in clams, abalone, crab, geoducks, sea urchins, and the like each day.

When a bullet or arrow or other projectile enters Benny's body, or if bludgeoned on the head, Benny bleeds.

Benny sees the clouds for the last time. Benny stops breathing. Benny stops swimming around. Benny stops thinking and breathing and eating. Benny dies. Death significantly alters Benny.

Benny is very attached to his hide in his natural form. A marine mammal like Benny will be considered significantly altered when it is no longer recognizable as a whole hide and has been made into something. Benny feels significantly altered when Benny becomes a pelt. Benny likes that Natives responsibly practice their Customary & Traditional Ways. Benny understands the Balance of Life.

Benny might give you his tail in order to keep his hide and paws and head. His hide and paws and head remain significant to Benny. In any event, when Benny becomes a pelt, he becomes significantly altered from his natural form. Benny no longer has concern for hide and paws and head. Death significantly alters Benny. No one would make handicrafts or articles of clothing out of a living, breathing, thinking Benny the sea otter.

Once a sea otter gets skinned, that sea otter is SIGNIFICANTLY altered. No matter how anyone sews the hide, the sea otter remains more and more SIGNIFICANTLY altered. No matter how that one sea otter hide gets sewn, only that one sea otter was killed. Why must Benny's hide get made into something? A tanned hide on its own makes a fine throw blanket or furniture adornment.

There are rules against "mass production", perhaps well intended against mass slaughter of sea otter but just another "gotcha" to Natives. If I kill seven sea otters and 27 people work on the hides to make products in one week, how many sea otters get killed? Seven. If I kill seven sea otters and take 17 years to make some products, how many sea otters were killed? Seven. See the difference? If seven sea otters are killed and worked on by Natives who live inland, how many sea otters were killed? Seven.

Who is the Government to tell artists how to make their pieces? Regardless of how they are sewn, the same amount of sea otters get harvested. The Government is not knowledgeable in the various techniques and methods and uses of Native sea otter art and manufacturing. So, how can an ignorant Government place technological limits on Natives when it comes to sea otter? This is Cruel & Unusual.

Natives always utilize the resources available to them. Many Native artists bring innovation to the art form and sometimes technology advances. Other Races of people are not limited by the Government as to how they can utilize a specific material.

Adult sea otters eat about one third their body weight in food each day. They clean up everything in an area and move on to the next. They have begun to impact commercial shellfish and other fisheries.

They already impact our Native Way of Life and their impact grows each year. Rather than hinder Natives with gotcha-type rules, the Federal Government should encourage the sustainable harvest of sea otter by Natives.

I appreciate the opportunity to comment on this issue.

Director, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
U.S. Department of the Interior

Washington, D.C. 20240

Dear Director Ashe:

On behalf of Friends of the Sea Otter, the Alaska Wildlife Alliance, the Oceans Public Trust Initiative, the Humane Society of the United States, and the Center for Biological Diversity, we are writing to express our concern over the failure of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service (FWS or Service) to follow the clear directives of President Obama, the U.S. Department of the Interior Manual, and other agency guidance on open and transparent federal decision-making in connection with the Service's very significant proposal to define what constitutes the authorized use of marine mammals in Alaska for handicraft purposes. Our organizations will submit more detailed comments on the FWS proposal, including the question of whether it constitutes a rule under the Administrative Procedure Act, by the close of the comment period on May 17, 2013, unless extended as requested herein. While our organizations appreciate the two opportunities the Service has provided to meet with staff via conference call regarding this proposal, we remain highly concerned over the lack of adequate public notice and comment regarding this proposal. The purpose of this initial letter is to seek your assistance in avoiding a situation where FWS will proceed to a final decision without giving the public adequate notice of this proposal and a full and fair opportunity to submit comments.

Director Ashe

On March 1, 2013, FWS published on the website for Region 7 (Alaska) a proposal that purports to clarify select terms under the Marine Mammal Protection Act (MMPA) related to the use of marine mammals for handicraft purposes by Alaska Natives.<sup>1</sup> In addition, FWS held extensive outreach to the Alaska Native community not made available to environmental stakeholders. The FWS proposal is of great concern to our organizations because it is likely to result in the increased take of sea otters throughout Alaska, including the Southwest Alaska stock that is listed as threatened under the Endangered Species Act. The FWS proposal may have a similar effect on other marine mammals in Alaska.

In addition to the likely result of the increased take of sea otters, there is strong evidence that this proposal is intended to be used as a means to reduce sea otter populations in areas where the species competes with commercial fisheries for shellfish. The relationship between the FWS proposal and the State of Alaska's attempts to encourage Alaska Native take of sea otters to reduce commercial fishing conflicts has generated a very significant level of controversy and public concern. One example of this intense public interest is a petition to oppose State of Alaska legislation calling for a bounty on sea otters for the benefit of commercial fisheries, which achieved over 24,000 signatures within only a few weeks of circulation. See Attachment.<sup>2</sup> Clearly, the American people care strongly about the fate of sea otters, and as the principal agency responsible for the conservation of this species, FWS should ensure full notice and adequate opportunity for comment on any proposal that could result in an increase in the killing of sea otters for any purpose.

As noted above, the FWS notice of the proposal to "clarify" key MMPA terms is found on the Regional Office website. There was no press release, no newspaper notice, no public meeting, no Federal Register notice, no fact sheet, and none of the outreach that is typically used by FWS for its actions— even those of far lesser importance than this proposal. The failure to take additional steps to encourage public involvement is contrary to numerous Executive Branch directives and guidance documents. Specifically, by failing to engage the public fully on this important issue, FWS has ignored President Obama's commitment to fostering an open and accessible government. Within days of taking office, President Obama instructed the Director of the Office of Management and Budget to issue an Open Government Directive, setting the three principles of transparency, participation, and collaboration as the cornerstones of an open government.<sup>3</sup> The Directive explained that “participation allows members of the public to contribute ideas and expertise so that their government can make policies with the benefit of information that is widely dispersed in society.”<sup>4</sup> This Directive further established a “presumption of openness” within the federal agency decision-making process.<sup>5</sup>

In order to ensure that public participation, transparency, and collaboration are enshrined in the federal government, the Open Government Directive mandates that each agency prepare an Open Government Plan. Demonstrating its clear commitment to public participation in the decision-making process, the Department of the Interior’s Open Government Plan “recognizes that public participation and engagement are essential ingredients for serving and working with the American public, making good policy and reaching sound decisions on challenging and complex natural resource management issues.”<sup>6</sup> As the Department stated in its Plan, “[c]itizen engagement has long been a hallmark of DOI and relationships between communities and our field offices are central to our success. . . . DOI cares about the interests and concerns of its stakeholders and tries to consider their interests and perspectives in carrying out the Department’s varied – and at times conflicting – missions.”<sup>7</sup> In fact, Interior’s Plan exceeds the requirements of the Open Government Directive to include several leading practices after formulation of a plan, including “publishing the plan,” “transparency,” “informing the public of significant actions of Interior,” “plans for engaging the public” and “collaboration with the public.”<sup>8</sup>

Despite these requirements, in this case FWS has not followed the President’s open government directives or even the provisions of the Department of Interior’s own Plan. By merely posting this important regulatory change as a notice to its Regional Office website, FWS has not properly informed the public. Individuals will not participate in the decision-making processes if they do not know that an action will affect them. Indeed, our members have not had sufficient time to learn about and respond to this very significant and controversial proposal. The presumption of openness in the decision-making process should compel FWS to conduct additional public outreach. This failure goes to the core mandates of the Interior's Open Government Plan, which FWS has neglected.

In addition to ignoring both the White House and Interior's open government directives, FWS disregarded Interior's own operating manual. The Departmental Manual prescribes the policies and procedures for all Departmental actions and explicitly states that "the Department of the Interior will offer the public meaningful opportunities for participation in decision-making processes leading to actions which may significantly affect or interest them."<sup>9</sup> Participation means "a systematic opportunity for the public to know about and express their opinions on possible Departmental actions and policies; and to know that their views are considered in shaping decisions."<sup>10</sup> Here, the mere posting of guidance to FWS's Regional Office website does not give the public a systematic opportunity to express their opinions. Rather, as the principal agency responsible for managing this sea otter population, FWS must ensure adequate notice and opportunity for public comment on this controversial proposal.

The Departmental Manual further lays out the steps and processes for soliciting public comment that FWS must take. FWS must first "notify the widest range of people of the possibility of a policy or action which might affect or interest them significantly," allowing "enough lead time on the initial notification and on communications throughout the process that individuals and groups have time to consider the values at stake for them and make arrangements to participate or be represented in the involvement process."<sup>11</sup> FWS should further "provide information . . . in plenty of time and in easily used forms."<sup>12</sup> The Departmental Manual also provides examples of actions FWS should take when amending these regulations, including press releases, publication in the Federal Register, direct mail, brochures, reports, speeches or presentations to interest groups, conferences, public hearings, "hotlines," workshops, and surveys or questionnaires.<sup>13</sup>

Without a Service-wide website notice, press release, public meetings, Federal Register notice and request for comment, reports, speeches, presentations, or any of the public outreach FWS normally conducts, it is clear that FWS has failed to properly solicit public comment or engage the public on the Alaska Native handicraft proposal.

Furthermore, even the Office of the Federal Register itself explains that its mission includes the publication of four types of entries, one of which is “interpretations of rules,” which is what FWS claims this proposal represents.<sup>14</sup> As a result, one of the most important steps to take at this time is publication in the Federal Register. There are numerous examples of agencies routinely publishing similar guidance documents in the Federal Register, including proposals by the FWS,<sup>15</sup> the Department of the Interior,<sup>16</sup> the National Marine Fisheries Service,<sup>17</sup> the Forest Service,<sup>18</sup> and the Environmental Protection Agency.<sup>19</sup> As just one example, FWS published a notice in the Federal Register when clarifying the meaning of the Endangered Species Act phrase “significant portion of its range.”<sup>20</sup> FWS should also follow normal agency practice in this situation when enacting significant changes in policy or guidance for the Alaska Natives, and publish a clarification in the Federal Register.

Furthermore, as referenced above, the Departmental Manual also recommends that FWS publish this change in the Federal Register as part of its efforts to solicit public participation.<sup>21</sup> Thus, FWS’s failure to take additional steps to engage the public is counter to the Administration’s policies on openness and transparency, the Departmental Manual, agency practice, and even the Office of the Federal Register’s policies. The failure on the part of FWS to publish this proposal and take adequate steps to inform the public of this proposal diminishes opportunities for the public to participate in the his meaningful process and further deprives the Service of important public input on a controversial proposal that could have significant environmental impacts.

For these reasons, we request that you direct FWS to: publish a Federal Register notice of this proposal; issue a press release and other media advisories; and hold public meetings in Alaska, California, and Washington, D.C. The comment period also should be extended by 60 days after publication of the Federal Register notice or after enhanced means of public communication. There is no reason to rush such an important proposal to final action, especially for the purpose of defining regulatory terms that have been used by FWS since 1974 and that are the subject of such strong public concern. Thank you for considering this request, and please contact us if you have any questions.

Very truly yours,

Stop the Alaskan Sea Otter Bounty!

signatures: 24,293

signature goal: 25,000

Target: Alaskan legislators
Sponsored by: Chris Wolverton

Senator Bert Stedman recently introduced a bill (SB 60), which would allow the Alaska Department of Fish and Game to pay a bounty to harvest sea otters. He believes the sea otter population is growing out of control, and threatens the state's shellfish industry.

Stedman's proposed bill is in conflict with the Marine Mammal Protection Act, which protects sea otters from being killed. Some of Alaska's sea otters are endangered, and bounty hunters could take the wrong otters by mistake.

Sea otters attract tourists with their cute appearance and playful activity. Wildlife-viewing tourism revenue more than makes up for the money otters cost the commercial fishing industry. They also play a vital role in Alaska's ecosystem by controlling sea urchins and other species that would otherwise take over the coastline. Please sign the petition to urge Alaskan legislators to stop the sea otter bounty!

To: Director Dan Ashe, US Fish & Wildlife Service:

As an emeritus member of the American Institute of Biological Sciences (AIBS), I ask you to you to stop efforts to manage fisheries through predator control by loosening restrictions of what constitutes "significantly altered".

Your suggested revision to the definition of "significantly altered" as to what can be done to a sea otter pelt for handicraft purposes is ambiguous, & at odds with the Marine Mammal Protection Act. It is being conducted without environmental impact analysis. It will be make it easy to turn sea otter pelts directly into blankets & rugs.

The Fish & Wildlife proposal will open the general market to commercialization of sea otter fur into mass-produced blankets & rugs, circumventing the (granted, not well thought-out) requirement that sea otter fur be significantly altered before being sold to the public.

Analysis to accurately determine population status of sea otters in Southeast AK is just getting underway. Whether the population is at a sustainable level, & whether it should be listed as "depleted" under the MMPA, is yet to be determined. Until it is, FWS should not be allowing any process that could direct more harvest on sea otters in AK.

We are losing about 200 species/day as we proceed past the midpoint in 1 of the 6 largest worldwide species extinction spasms that have been identified since lifeforms became large enough to be seen with the unaided eye 600 million years ago.

Please do not put forth a new definition for "significantly altered" that is less restrictive of what is made from sea otter pelts. It would put added hunting pressure on sea otters in Southeast AK at a time when we are not in a position to know what would happen as a result.

Maybe that's a pretty good description of the way we are doing just about everything now.

Dear Sirs:

Continue to protect sea otter populations under current Marine Mammal Protection Act statues.

The killing of sea otters should not occur, to benefit fisherman, this is simply wrong.

The fishery is down due to over harvest, and backing off on the harvest, striving towards a sustainable taking of fish is where the focus should be, not

Scapegoating of sea otter.

Dear Mr. Ashe:

We represent the North American contingent of the management team for the International Union for the Conservation of Nature and Natural Resources (IUCN) Otter Specialist Group (OSG). The OSG is comprised of 280 scientists and conservationists dedicated to the conservation of the world's 13 species of otters. Recently, members of OSG and others have been expressing concern about what appears to be a concerted effort in Alaska to provide for increased "take" of sea otters (i.e., Alaskan Native People are currently allowed to harvest sea otters for traditional purposes, but are being encouraged to use this cultural exemption of the Marine Mammal Protection Act to ostensibly to decrease sea otter populations) in southeastern Alaska, apparently as a population management tool; something it was never designed to do. We are aware that sea otter populations are increasing in this region and that this increase has in some cases contributed to conflict between some elements of the marine-invertebrate-fishing industry and the sea otter – specifically, the conflict relates to concern that the diet of the sea otter is reducing populations of some commercially important invertebrates. However, the ecological role of sea otters in near-shore marine communities is extremely complex, both ecologically and socio-economically. In that regard, there are various stakeholders to be considered – including those concerned that sea otters are impacting their livelihoods (i.e., those involved in the harvest of marine invertebrates), those that benefit by the presence of sea otters (e.g., tour operators and those that those involved in the recreational and commercial pursuit of fin fish), and those that understand the value of sea otters to the ecological health and biodiversity of near-shore marine environments.

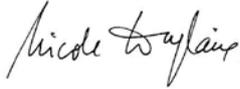

We are not at this time taking a formal position on this issue pertaining to sea otter conservation. Instead we first want to become acquainted with the positions taken among the various, governmental natural-resource agencies (formal as well as general positions) responsible for conserving sea otters regarding any changes in management status of the species in southeastern Alaska. In that regard, we are asking that you please provide us information on the following issues:

1. Does the USFWS support reduction of sea otter populations in southeastern Alaska?
  - a. If yes, what would be the mechanisms for which these reductions would be achieved?
  - b. If yes, how do you envision management and oversight of sea otter pelts and by-products entering the global market?
2. Are there plans being considered to change the endangered species status of sea otters in portions of Alaska?

IUCN/SSC Otter Specialist Group
... leading global otter conservation

3. Currently, the United States has the management and conservation responsibility for roughly 70% of the world population of sea otters. The Marine Mammal Protection Act (MMPA) recognizes the vulnerability of marine mammals to human take and conflict in marine fisheries. At this time, are you supporting changing the status of this species relative to protections afforded under the MMPA?

Dear U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

There must be NO changes to the Marine Mammal Protection Act which would result in the expansion of the definition of "handicraft" to include nearly unaltered sea otter pelts!

ANY definition of handicraft should be narrow enough to ensure sea otters are allowed to recover and thrive.

Sea otters play an important role in Alaska's coastal ecosystems. They need to be protected - not treated like a handy resource for local quilting clubs!

SHAME on you for even *considering* such a vile possibility!

RE: Please Protect Alaska's Sea Otters

I oppose changes to the Marine Mammal Protection Act that would expand the definition of "handicraft" to include nearly unaltered sea otter pelts. Any definition of handicraft should be narrow enough to ensure that sea otters are allowed to recover and thrive.

Through important protections, Alaska's sea otters are finally on the path to recovery after being pushed to the brink of extinction because of over-hunting. Under the Marine Mammal Protection Act, Alaska Native hunters alone are allowed to kill sea otters, and they can only do so to create "authentic native handicrafts." It would be disastrous if those protections are weakened. If the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service gives in to pressures from the commercial fishing industry, the rules may be expanded to include nearly unaltered sea otter pelts under the "handicrafts" definition.

Alaska's famous sea otters are finally on a slow road to recovery. After they were almost wiped out by hunters and trappers in the international fur trade, limits were placed on hunting, allowing only Alaska Natives to hunt the otters for their native handicrafts.

Sea otter populations are nowhere near the numbers there used to be, and otters in southwest Alaska are not recovering. They have been listed as threatened under the Endangered Species Act. The Service's new rule does not have this distinction; it would apply to all sea otters -- even those listed as threatened.

Sea otters play an important role in Alaska's coastal ecosystems by encouraging the growth of kelp beds, which serve as nurseries for fish and create important carbon dioxide sinks. They need to be protected, not treated as predators to be eradicated.

I urgently ask the Fish and Wildlife Service to protect Alaska's sea otters, not to give in to commercial fishers, who are pushing to control sea otter populations.

Thank you for your help on behalf of America's wildlife.

Yours truly,

J. Capozzelli

Dear U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Sea otters play an important role in Alaska's coastal ecosystems. They need to be protected, not treated as predators to be eradicated.

Another crucial issue at stake here is that of the human heart. In all discussion about animals as commodities, it's vital to remember that the most important commodity of all is the human heart. It lies at the core of life itself and all happiness that lasts. Nothing, I repeat, nothing (not even billions in profits) is worth causing others to suffer, because nothing is worth the high toll exacted upon the human heart that such apathy demands. All too easily we can emotionally disconnect and decide not to care about those we cause to suffer, in order to benefit from their use with minimal guilt, but over time this subtle process erodes our capacity to love and care about anyone. What on this earth is worth that loss? Conversely, can you imagine a world where compassion toward all creatures is practiced on a global scale? That begins with each person. And it is worth everything.

Thank you.

***Otter pelts are with the bloody trade in marine mammal parts that would otherwise shock the conscience of American when done by our Canadian neighbors, and invariably do whenever they are brought to public attention. Dear U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

I recall fondly the otters from a well-guided tour of southeastern Alaska with my mother and sister.

Field experts made us privy to the ways in which Federal and State policy has been wise or unwise in managing our precious heritage. The global crisis is already obviously much worse than it was the dozen years ago we made that trip. It doesn't matter how it got this way - only that we need to behave with a renewed sense of what it is to do business with nature.

Yes, I oppose changes to the Marine Mammal Protection Act that would expand the definition of "handicraft" to include nearly unaltered sea otter pelts. Any definition of handicraft should be narrow enough to ensure that sea otters are allowed to recover and thrive.

Notes:

John provided comments on the following items

1. Coastal dwelling - this was good but problems with the term permanently. Suggested changing that term to "primary residence"
2. Large-scale mass production - this was good but "multiple-carvers" doesn't apply to sea otters so recommends deletion; should clarify that classes are not a form of mass production; and add some examples.
3. Handicrafters in Cordova make items that are clearly handicrafts but don't fit the guidance.
 For example: hats that have the head attached (item not blocked as stated in clarification) cape - made from panels sewn together with feet as clasp at neck (item also not blocked)

Recommended Action(s):

Document for file. Discuss and consider with the team. May need to have a section that has pre-approval of designs such as the cape mentioned above.

Re: Comment on Select Terms under MMPA in regard to Sea Otter

Greetings,

Organized Village of Kasaan (“OVK”) is a federally recognized Tribe. We are located on Prince of Wales Island (“POW”) in southern Southeast Alaska. “POW” is located west of Ketchikan.

This letter is to formerly comment on three (3) select terms under the Marine Mammal Protection Act in regard to sea otters. We appreciate any effort by a federal agency to consider definitions from an indigenous perspective.

First of all, this comment derived from our newly formed Prince of Wales Tribal Sea Otter Commission (“POW-TSOC”). We have formed in 2012 with “OVK” receiving funding to make it possible.

Four (4) federally recognized Tribes (Organized Village of Kasaan; Craig Tribal Association; Hydaburg Cooperative Association; and Klawock Cooperative Association, Tribe) support (via Tribal Resolutions) and are represented on “POW-TSOC”.

In our first year (2012), we created our bylaws, mission/vision statement, logo, and Final Draft Management Plan regarding sea otters surrounding Prince of Wales Island (and surrounding islands). It has been reviewed, finalized and sent to FWS-Alaska Region for review. This began or consultation process.

OVK applied for and received funding again to continue POW-TSOC through FY 2013. In March 2013, POW-TSOC held a meeting in Klawock, Alaska to discuss and create a unified comment regarding select terms under MMPA in regard to sea otter.

Here is POW-TSOC's comment with explanation on your three (3) definitions:

1. "Significantly altered from their natural form":

Once a bullet enters the body of a sea otter, it is considered significantly altered. The sea otter stopped breathing, becoming altered. It is significantly altered when the pelt is removed from the body.

Sea Otter sections can be removed from authentic Alaskan handicraft, and it appears if you are putting the enforcement responsibility on the artist. Why should an artist be held accountable for what the consumer does with a rightfully purchased "Authentic Alaskan handicraft"?

More stringent laws need to be made to those that are breaking the laws. A non-native who is stripping artwork for pieces of sea otter need to be held accountable for the law they are breaking.

Outreach & education from your agency needs to occur on rights as a coastal Alaska native hunter and/or artisan that dwells on the coast who intends to create a cottage based industry that requires a northern sea otter to be significantly altered from their natural form with limits on large scale mass production.

A lot of confusion and hesitation exists from a hunter and artisan perspective when they either want to "pull the trigger" or "insert the leather sewing needle". It is intimidating to only be told that you must follow the law. This law is interpretative to each individual law enforcement officer. Outreach & education must occur to enforcement officials also.

2. "Dwells on the coast"

An Alaska resident who lives permanently in a coastal area or coastal community that is tidally influenced.

"Dwells on the coast"- This also simplifies who dwells on the coast. You may want to consider changing the word "dwells". That provides confusion. POW-TSOC also recommends that all Alaska natives should be informed that buy, sell or barter can occur between those that don't "dwell on coastal Alaska", and those that do.

3. "Large-scale mass production".

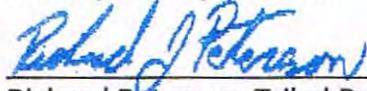

Use of copying devices such as pantographs, embroidery machines, cutting presses, transfers, and stamps.

To not allow large-scale mass production is telling Alaska Natives that we cannot adapt. This commerce driven term provides more disadvantages to Alaska natives. Since time immemorial, we have adapted. Now a federal law is telling Alaska Natives that we can't progress forward. Our production tactics must remain as they were in the year 1741 (when Russia first landed in Alaska).

In short, Alaska Natives are being told how to hunt/gather/take sea otters; where we must live in order to hunt a sea otter; and that we can't adapt to today's society to advance our economic opportunities. Coastal Alaska Natives must be aware that this is a right, and not a regulation to hunt or sew.

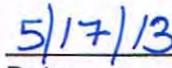

We appreciate our opportunity to comment on these important definitions and issues at hand. We also look forward to working with USFWS and NMFS on our endeavors.

Thank you for your time.

Sea Otter Hunting

To Whom it May Concern:

As I understand it, Public Comments have been opened/extended regarding the hunting of Sea Otter in Southeast Alaska.

Sea Otter hunting: a tradition of my ascendants, the pelts and carcasses had many uses for the individuals as well as the family units. I have thought about these uses and wanting to teach my children our Alaskan Native heritage, I can only do so through books and the internet. This is because I am unfortunately only an eighth Tsimshian and my son and daughter are only a sixteenth, we can learn, but not practice our beliefs.

I request that the blood quantum levels required to hunt Sea Otter be dropped from one quarter, to one sixteenth. I ask for this severe drop because in this day and age, interracial marriages and relationships are far more common than years past and consequently blood quantum levels are dropping. This drop in blood levels makes learning about and practicing our heritage more important than ever.

On a side note: If you guys have any pull on the SHARC cards for subsistence Halibut fishing, I'd greatly appreciate a change to the requirement of being enrolled in a tribe. As I am a Tsimshian, who lives outside of Ketchikan/Metlekatla and therefore cannot enroll in the tribes as I do not live in the specific area. Nor will the local tribes accept me as I am not Tlingit. Consequently I cannot fish for more than the usual sport fishing amounts.

If there is a better avenue to follow regarding the SHARC Issue, could you please let me know?

Thank you for your time reading this.

Dear Director Dan Ashe, U.S. Fish & Wildlife Service:

I urge you to stop efforts to manage fisheries through the use of predator control by loosening the restrictions of what constitutes "significantly altered". I believe your current suggested revision to the definition of "significantly altered" as to what can be done to a sea otter pelt for handicraft purposes is too ambiguous. It is too broad and at odds with the Marine Mammal Protection Act and is being conducted without any environmental impact analysis. I am concerned that it will be easy to turn sea otter pelts into blankets and rugs with little modification. It is too broad and at odds with the MMPA and is being conducted without any environmental impact analysis.

I am afraid the FWS proposal would open up the general market to the commercialization of sea otter fur into mass-produced items like blankets and rugs by circumventing the requirement that sea otter fur be significantly altered before being sold to the general public.

In addition, the analysis to determine the true population status of sea otters in Southeast Alaska is just getting underway and questions as to whether the population is at optimum sustainable population levels and whether this population could be listed as "depleted" under the MMPA have yet to be determined. Until such time, FWS should not be allowing any process that could direct more harvest on sea otters in Alaska.

Please do not put forth a definition for "significantly altered" that will be less restrictive of what is made from sea otter pelts and that would put added hunting pressure on sea otters in Southeast Alaska and possibly elsewhere in Alaska.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Krissy Machon

Greater Protection of Alaska's Sea Otters

Dear U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Sea otters play an important role in Alaska's coastal ecosystems. They need to be protected, not treated as predators to be eradicated. With the changes in global climate and the ocean flora and fauna it is imperative we protect this top predator to help maintain balance within it's range. The days of sloppy management must come to an end; we can't afford it any more.

I oppose changes to the Marine Mammal Protection Act that would expand the definition of "handicraft" to include nearly unaltered sea otter pelts. Any definition of handicraft should be narrow enough to ensure that sea otters are allowed to recover and thrive.

Dear U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

I oppose changes to the Marine Mammal Protection Act that would expand the definition of "handicraft" to include nearly unaltered sea otter pelts. Any definition of handicraft should be narrow enough to ensure that sea otters are allowed to recover and thrive all over their range.

Sea otters play an important role in Alaska's coastal ecosystems. They need to be protected, not treated as predators to be eradicated. Fisherman benefit too when sea otter populations remain healthy, this helps to keep the fisheries healthy.

The Fish and Wildlife Service needs to remember it's job is to use accurate scientific studies to PROTECT and MAINTAIN viable FISH AND WILDLIFE populations.

Wildlife bring millions of dollars to Alaska and other wild areas because people love to see wildlife in the wild. Continue to protect the sea otters.

The wholesale assault on wildlife, including sea otters, bears, and wolves needs to stop! All of these animals need our protection from politically motivated delistings for the benefit of a few. These populations have not see full recovery to their ranges, nor full population recovery. Keep full protections for sea otters to keep them from slipping back to threatened status, there should be NO delistings and no changes to their status. Do not allow hunting of sea otters. Continue to protect the sea otters.

Thank you.

TRIBAL COUNSUTATION HEARINGS
HELD BY THE US DOI-US FISH AND WILDLIFE
HEARING ON RULE MAKING FOR THE MARINE
MAMMAL PROTECTION ACT - SEA OTTERS

TESTIMONY OF HAROLD HOUSTON AND
ROBERT W. LOESCHER
MAY 15, 2013

In March, 2013 the US Department of the Interior – United States Fish and Wildlife Service (hereinafter USFWS) announced rule making related to the Marine Mammal Protection Act (hereinafter MMPA) section (b) Exemptions for Alaska Natives pertaining to sea otters and Alaska Native people.

My name is Harold Houston I am a Tribally enrolled citizen of the Central Council of Tlingit and Haida Indians of Alaska, a federally recognized Tribe. I am an Elected Vice President of the Tribe and I serve on its Executive Council. In addition, I am the President of the Juneau Tlingit & Haida Community Council representing over 6,000 Tribal Citizens and finally, I serve on the Huna Totem Board of Directors, and the ANSCA village corporation of Hoonah, Alaska.

My name is Robert W. Loescher. I am an enrolled Tribal member of the federally recognized Tribe, the Central Council of the Tlingit and Haida Indians of Alaska. Additionally, in this regard I am a Councilman for the Juneau Tlingit and Haida Community Council and a delegate to the Tribal Assembly, and an elected Tribal Judge. I am also a member of the Douglas Indian Association, a federally recognized Tribe and the Alaska Native Brotherhood, the oldest Native American civil rights organization. Lastly I am the sole proprietor of Tlingit Furs, LLC – a company engaged in the acquisition of Sea Otter pelts, getting them tanned and ready for the cottage industry handicraft market.

TESTIMONY PREPARATION AND ORGANIZATION

In researching and preparing this testimony, we felt it important to organize the presentation as follows:

- I. MMPA excerpt on Sea Otters and Alaska Natives
- II. Two (2) federal court cases are relevant to keep in mind as these rules are considered
  - a. Boyd Didrickson case No. 91-36323
  - b. Mark Webb case No. 99-35463

III. Proposed Three (3) Rules

- a. Dwells on the Coast
- b. Large-scale Mass Production
- c. Significantly Altered From Their Natural Form

IV. Indigenous People’s Council for Marine Mammals (IPCOMM) and the Alaska Federation of Natives (AFN) regulation proposal

V. Conclusion

I. MMPA excerpt on Sea Otters and Alaska Natives

I have underlined for emphasis words which are subject of the rule making proposal by the DOI-USFWS

Section (b) Exemptions for Alaskan natives
Except as provided in section 1379 of this title, the provisions of this chapter shall not apply with respect to the taking of any marine mammal by any Indian, Aleut, or Eskimo who resides in Alaska and who dwells on the coast of the North Pacific Ocean or the Arctic Ocean if such taking— (1) is for subsistence purposes; or (2) is done for purposes of creating and selling authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing: Provided, That only authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing may be sold in interstate commerce: And provided further, That any edible portion of marine mammals may be sold in native villages and towns in Alaska or for native consumption. For the purposes of this subsection, the term “authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing” means items composed wholly or in some significant respect of natural materials, and which are produced, decorated, or fashioned in the exercise of traditional native handicrafts without the use of pantographs, multiple carvers, or other mass copying devices. Traditional native handicrafts include, but are not limited to weaving, carving, stitching, sewing, lacing, beading, drawing and painting; and (3) in each case, is not accomplished in a wasteful manner. Notwithstanding the preceding provisions of this subsection, when, under this chapter, the Secretary determines any species or stock of marine mammal subject to taking by Indians, Aleuts, or Eskimos to be depleted, he may prescribe regulations upon the taking of such marine mammals by any Indian, Aleut, or Eskimo described in this subsection. Such regulations may be established with reference to species or stocks, geographical description of the area included, the season for taking, or any other factors related to the reason for establishing such regulations and consistent with the purposes of this chapter. Such regulations shall be prescribed after notice and hearing required by section 1373 of this title and shall be removed as soon as the Secretary determines that the need for their imposition has disappeared. In promulgating any regulation or making any assessment pursuant to a hearing or proceeding under this subsection or section 1386 (b)(2) of this title, or in making any determination of depletion under this subsection or finding regarding unmitigable adverse impacts under subsection (a)(5) of this section that affects stocks or persons to which this subsection applies, the Secretary shall be responsible for demonstrating that such regulation, assessment, determination, or finding is supported by substantial evidence on the basis of the record as a whole. The preceding sentence shall only be applicable in an action brought by one or more Alaska Native organizations a. representing persons to which this subsection applies.

RWL REVIEW AND ANALYSIS

The underlined words above are words subject to the proposed USFWS rule making.

The MMPA identifies “Indians, Aleuts, and Eskimos” living in coastal areas of Alaska as persons qualified to hunt and make handicrafts from sea mammals. These words broadly describe Native people and congress in its wisdom chose this general identification of eligible persons. A more refined list would include Tlingits, Haidas, Tsimshians, Eyaks, Atna, and Athabascan.

Aleuts should be listed as Unangan.

Eskimos are Yupik and Inupiat.

It is interesting that the MMPA statute uses the word “Indian.” Cohen’s American Indian Law Handbook defines the word “Indian” as follows:

a. Section 3.03 Definition of Indian

Indian as a person meeting two qualifications; (a) that some of the individual’s ancestors...Lived in what is now the United States before its discovery by Europeans, and (b) that the individual is recognized as an Indian by the individual’s tribe or community...It is therefore necessary to determine the specific purpose for which Indian identity is relevant. A conclusion may then be reached in the context of the statute or other provision in question.

(Cohen, pages 171-172)

b. [4]—Federal Definitions

The common test that has evolved after United States v. Rogers, for use with both of the federal Indian country criminal statutes, considers Indian descent, as well as recognition as an Indian by a federally recognized tribe.

(Cohen, page 177)

- c. When they do exist, federal statutory definitions of who is an Indian vary considerably from statute to statute. Some emphasize membership or eligibility for membership in a federally recognized Indian nation. Thus, the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act of 1975 defines an Indian as “a person who is a member of an Indian tribe.” Indian tribes under the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act are limited to those tribes “recognized as eligible for the special programs and services provided by the United States to Indians because of their status as Indians.”

(Cohen, page 178)

- d. Federal definitions of who is an Indian that demand enrolled membership do not raise equal protection concerns, because the classification is deemed political rather than racial.

(Cohen, page 181)

- e. The term “Indian” as used in this Act shall include all persons of Indian descent who are members of any recognized Indian tribe now under Federal jurisdiction, and all persons who are descendants of such members who were, on June 1, 1934, residing within the present boundaries of any Indian reservation, and shall further include all other persons of one-half or more Indian blood. For the purposes of this Act, Eskimos and other aboriginal peoples of Alaska shall be considered Indians.

(Cohen, page 181)

We would request and propose a rule as follows:

The definition “Indian” is a person who is enrolled in a federally recognized Tribe as listed by the Secretary.

This kind of clarified Rule would help many people residing in our coastal communities.

Additionally, we request and propose a Rule to include and define “Subsistence,” as follows:

( ) For the purpose of this Title, the term subsistence shall be as provided for in ( ) Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act Title 8.

* * *

II. Two (2) federal court cases are relevant to keep in mind as these rules are considered:

a. Boyd Didrickson case No. 91-36323

RWL REVIEW AND ANALYSIS

The Didrikson vs. the DOI-USFWS case provides precedence and guidance in considering the present rule making. The case found:

- Rule making that is vague and lacking clarity is unacceptable and unlawful.
- Native uses and products are not limited to only products made prior to 1972.

- Native products utilizing zippers, buttons and the like are not prohibited.

When reviewing and analyzing the drafting of the three (3) presently proposed Rules advanced by the USFWS, it appears that the USFWS proposes language which violates the Didrikson case principles set by the federal court for future rule making.

RWL REVIEW AND ANALYSIS

This case recognized an Eskimo living in the interior area of Alaska who had traveled to a coastal area, joined a hunting party and took back to interior village home sea mammal parts and meat for subsistence use. The court determined that this interior Alaska Native was not excluded from the provisions of the MMPA. Additionally, the court determined that federal law enforcement officials must have a warrant in hand before they confiscate and take any fish and wildlife subsistence food or products from an Alaska Native and his home.

III. Proposed Three (3) Rules,

1. Dwells on the Coast

Dwells on the coast refers to residing in Alaska and living permanently in an area or community that is adjacent to waters that are tidally influenced or in an area commonly inhabited and used by marine mammals.

RWL REVIEW AND ANALYSIS

- The federal statute provides as follows:

“...any Indian, Aleut, or Eskimo who resides in Alaska and who dwells on the coast of the North Pacific Ocean or the Arctic Ocean...”

The difference between the law and the Rule proposal focuses upon “permanent resident.” Additionally, there is a requirement that a Native person must be living “adjacent to waters.”

The problem with this distinction is that the statute says that an Indian, Aleut and Eskimo person must be living in a coastal water area. The statute does not require living permanently in such an area.

- Further it should be noted, that in the Mark Webb case decided by the federal court, a Native person was eligible to participate in and utilize sea mammals and their parts in order to supply their subsistence needs and to participate in trade and barter utilizing sea mammal for the making of products.

The proposed Rule violates the legal principal for being vague and ambiguous. Further, the proposed Rule expands and is contrary to the plain meaning of the statute.

Therefore, this Rule should not be promulgated.

2. Large-scale Mass Production

Large-scale mass production refers to the use of mass copying devices such as pantographs, multiple carvers, embroidery machines, cutting presses, stencils, transfers, stamps, and/or the use of assembly line production. The formation of traditional Native groups or cooperatives and the use of modern implements such as sewing machines are permitted. However, there can be no manufacturing on a large-scale by means of extensive mechanization or division of labor, such as using a standardized pattern on a large-scale.

RWL REVIEW AND ANALYSIS

- The proposed regulation focuses upon “methods and means” of production of handicrafts. The Rule adds restrictions focused upon the use of “patterns” and “assembly line” production.

From time in memorial Indigenous people have made clothing and articles of trade and barter – and no one can remember when patterns were not in use. To make a single article or multiple articles of clothing or other products simple patterns were utilized and drawn out and placed upon animal skins before the product – coat, blanket, hats, parkas, etc. was prepared for stitching. It’s only commonsense. Why does the government want to restrict the use of patterns? The uses of patterns assure the outcome of a quality and useful product. Also, the use of patterns supports the outcome of a traditional style or representation of clan and culture.

- The proposed Rule exceeds the requirements of the statute, imposes unconventional and non-traditional requirement for the making of Native handicrafts. Therefore, the Rule should be opposed and not promulgated.

3. Significantly Altered From Their Natural Form

- a. In order to be considered significantly altered from its natural form, a tanned, dried, cured, or preserved part of a sea otter hide, devoid only of the head, feet, and tail (i.e., blocked), or any other remaining parts of the hide, must be substantially changed through means including, but not limited to: weaving, carving, stitching, sewing, lacing, beading, drawing, painting, or other handicrafting methods. Examples of significantly altered items include: mittens, hats, gloves, mukluks, purses, a blanket made from a hide or pieces of hide with a backing or lining and stitched around the edges.

b. Items will not be considered significantly altered from their natural form where merely minimal changes have been made to a hide devoid only of the head, feet, and tail (i.e., blocked), and where those items can be easily converted back to an unaltered piece of hide. Examples of items not considered to be significantly altered include: a cape that consists of a large hide with a single button neck closure; a hide that has been drawn on with a marker; a blanket with a few stitches.

RWL REVIEW AND ANALYSIS

The keyword difference between the MMPA statutory language and the keyword in the proposed USFWS Rule is “significantly” and “substantially.” The following are the online dictionary definitions of these keywords:

A. Significantly:

- In a way that is large or important enough to be noticed or have an effect
- [more significantly; most significantly] – used to say that something is important or meaningful
- In a way that has a special or hidden meaning (having a meaning or purpose)
- Important; of consequence.

B. Substantial:

- Considerable in quantity, significantly great, firmly constructed, sturdy
- Of ample or considerable amount, quantity, size, etc.

As you can see, there is a difference in the definition of these words.

- “Significantly” appears to be a softer yet meaningful event or action
- “Substantially” seems to co notate a larger more robust event or action

In federal case law and an “agency” cannot invent a limitation by regulation more than what the statute provides. Also, in case law, there is a principal that “law is not susceptible to limiting construction when the language is plain and unambiguous...” in the statute.

Therefore, it appears that the USFWS may be exceeding its regulatory authority by the promotion of this Rule.

The excerpt below is the IPCOMM/AFN proposal – but here the USFWS is saying “No” to that proposal. The government denies that an otter is significantly altered if the head, paws and tail are separated from the pelt, and the pelt is separated from the head, paws and tail.

The Government proposes specific language as follows:

Items will not be considered significantly altered from their natural form where merely minimal changes have been made to a hide devoid only of the head, feet, and tail (i.e. blocked), and where those items can be easily converted back to an unaltered piece of hide.

This interpretation exceeds the requirements of the statute and the definition of the word “significantly altered.” The proposed Rule does not acknowledge the statutory construct of “significantly altered,” the methods and means prescribed by this statute and the ability of Alaska Natives to create numerous products for commerce, trade and barter and for a subsistence use.

- The proposed Rule is concerned with the issue of a handicraft item being converted back to an unaltered form and creates the opportunity for a non-Native to create other products. Also the proposed rule advances an example of a “cape” that may contain a large set of skins sewn together that could be converted to other products. The government by this Rule provides for the opportunity of law enforcement to arrest and prosecute an Indian, Aleut, or Eskimo and make him a criminal. Why does the government not propose a Rule to prosecute a purchaser of a sea otter product who has converted such product into other products? Or instead of creating a limited list and a single example of a non-approved product-why does the government not offer a Rule with an extensive list of products that Alaska Natives may use and rely upon. This would eliminate and reduce law enforcement against Alaska Native handicrafters and provide some certainty to their enterprise.

Therefore, we would recommend a Rule that would provide a list of hand sewn products which would be made from Sea Otter pelts, as follows:

Hand sewn products made pursuant to the MMPA shall include but, are not limited to the following:

Tribal ceremonial regalia	Blankets
Tribal trade and gift items	Lap/throw blankets

*The above list may identify gendered and non-gendered items.

** The above listed products shall be considered altered by the addition of colored dyes, loops, buttons, bows, zippers, straps, ornaments, elastic bands, and others such items.

The legal franchise to Alaska Natives to hunt and produce handicraft products requires by law a quote “Native to Native” only handling of sea otter pelts. The chain of title through the hunting, tannery, handicraft phases must be done and be under the control of Alaska Natives, once a pelt is turned into a commercial or subsistence product, than the chain of title and the Alaska Native’s only requirement expires. In other words, once a product is made and is in the open market the statutory and regulatory controls at least in most parts of the United States domestic market no longer exists. The government’s effort in the proposed rule to restrict and define what a product may be exceeds their authority under the statute. The government’s purpose in the MMPA is to protect and conserve sea mammals, including sea otters. The law provides for an exception for the Alaska Native to hunt and make handicraft products. The USFWS does not have under the law the ability to limit and control commerce and has a limited ability to control products that can be made from sea otter pelts. The Didrickson federal case said that the government could not define or limit products made by Alaska Natives prior to 1972 and after 1972. So it stands to reason that the government is not in conformity with the Didrickson decision and its proposal to define products and limitations on products exceeds the law and the agency's authority.

IV. Indigenous People's Council for Marine Mammals (IPCOMM) and the Alaska Federation of Natives (AFN) regulation proposal:

The Alaska Federation of Natives convention 2012 held in Anchorage, Alaska adopted resolution 12-10 to endorse and support a recommendation by IPCOMM on the definition of "significantly altered" as follows:

Now therefore be it resolved by the delegates to the 2012 Annual Convention of the Alaska Federation of Natives, Inc. petition the Secretary of Interior and the Director of the US Fish and Wildlife Service to adopt the language clarifying "significantly altered" for the purposes of sea otter handicrafts, upon concurrence by IPCOMM, as follows: consider a marine mammal product to be "significantly altered" when it is no longer recognizable as a whole hide. This includes 1) a tanned hide, devoid of head, feet, and tail which includes but is not limited to weaving, carving, stitching, sewing, lacing, beading, drawing, painting, other decorative fashions, or made into another material or medium, or 2) a tanned head, tail, feet or other part devoid of the remainder of the hide which is made into a handicraft using one of the aforementioned processes.

RWL ANALYSIS AND RECOMMENDATION

- Alaska Natives would consider a bullet hole in the head of a sea otter as being “significantly altered.” However, it appears that the government would not be satisfied with this definition.
- The proposed definition of “significantly altered” advanced by IPCOMM has the benefit of its simplicity. The pelt is altered by the removal of the head, paws, tail and those parts separate from the pelt are in an altered or blocked form.
- As described in an above section, there is a difference in the word “significantly” and the word “substantial.” We believe that the word “substantial” is not consistent with the federal statute. Therefore, the word “significantly” should be understood and is defined to have a softer yet meaningful event or action when considering a first level altering of a pelt.
- The IPCOMM definition does not stand alone in relation to the MMPA. The law further requires “methods and means” for the production of fur products. The limitations are defined in the law and affect the approach to “significantly altered” the pelt and parts of the sea otter.

Therefore, we recommend that the IPCOMM/AFN proposal be promulgated as a Rule in combination with the above proposed Rule which provides a list of products.

V. CONCLUSION

PROPOSED RULE MAKINGS

As a result of the review and analysis above, we conclude opposition to the proposed Rule making of the DOI-USFWS.

As an alternate to those proposed Rules, we support the IPCOMM/AFN Rule proposal for “significantly altered.”

We request and propose that the DOI-USFWS add rules as follows:

1. A rule to define “Indian”
2. As an alternative to the DOI-USFWS proposed Rule related to “significantly and/or substantially altered,” we request and propose the IPCOMM/AFN definition in combination with a list of products.

ALASKA NATIVE LEADERSHIP DILEMA

At this point, Alaska Native leaders are puzzled and perplexed as to how to approach the opportunity and legal franchise that congress has provided for Indian, Aleuts and Eskimos to hunt and make handicraft products out of sea otter pelts. We find ourselves confronted with the following situations and circumstances:

The federal court case law since 1972 finds that the DOI-USFWS has been stumbling around in its rule making trying to define “significantly altered” hand sewn products. The court has sided with Alaska Natives in every decision. Yet the government has failed for over 40 years to come up with reasonable and operable definitions and rules.

- With regard to hunting and Native management of raw and tanned pelts, the government has undertaken law enforcement which has made criminals of Native people yet the court has sided with Alaska Native people wherever they are in the ownership and inventory of sea mammals and their parts. The government in their law enforcement has used unusual practices of entrapment and mass regional arrests and prosecutions.
- The Native people, through IPCOMM, have made every effort to work on sea mammal issues including sea otters with the federal agency US Fish and Wildlife Service and the Department of Commerce – US Marine Fisheries

Agency. Despite their best efforts, it seems that the endless meetings on sea mammal issues including sea otters do not provide satisfactory results. Native leadership is frustrated with the federal agencies. There seems to be no reason or understanding why the government conducts itself in this manner. It is unknown as to the policy differences between the positions of the Alaska Natives and the government. The best that we can discern is that the government leans towards the conservation and protection of sea mammals over the fact and realization that congress included Alaska Native's traditional and customary uses of sea mammals as a part of the resource management spectrum. If there are other reasons Native leadership does not know what it could be. Somehow all of this needs to be defined and resolved – soon.

- Native leadership and participants in the hunting and the making of handicraft products from sea otters find themselves in an environment of political stress and feel cornered between the federal government's management and the needs of the Alaska public. The Alaska commercial fisherman are angry about the over abundance of sea otters and the predation by the sea otters of commercial crab, sea urchins, clams, cockles, muscles, geoducks, and the like. The population of the sea otters has gone out of control. Presently their population approaches 25,000 animals and their population increases 15-20% per year and each consumes about 20% of their weight per day in sea resources-the average weight of a sea otter is between sixty and eighty pounds. These animals extend their geographic habitat in an expansive progression as they diminish their food sources. The sea otter consumption also impacts subsistence resources utilized by Alaska Natives. The MMPA is designed for the conservation and protection of sea mammals. The law provides little help to find a way to reduce the over abundance of the otters. It appears that government science and related resource management is behind and there is little data base to provide for a management plan for these animals.

- And then there are the Alaska Native interests in Title (8) of ANILCA-Subsistence. The over abundance of sea otters is devastating the same marine resources which are needed for traditional and customary food security of the Native people of Southeastern Alaska protected by law. Native leadership feels strongly that the sea otter threatens the balance between subsistence use, commercial use and conservation of marine resources. This needs to be managed now – not later.
- Native leadership is concerned about the public's interest in marine mammals. Animal rights groups and conservation groups create pressure on the government agency, attack the hunting and utilization of furs and diminish public support for the marketing of products from sea mammal furs and parts. Somehow in the mix of all of this, Native leadership finds it important to find a management plan, conservation plan and a Native use plan that would be acceptable to the public and be a viable enterprise for Indian, Aleuts, and Eskimos. The present approach of the DOI-USFWS does not seem to be able to accomplish this result this must be change.

- We are advised by your agency personnel that the USFWS has received over 35,000 letters related to its proposed rule. Our question is – how does our testimony and proposals fit in with the opinions of 35,000 Americans?
- This whole matter has a high level of political involvement a scrutiny. The Alaska State Legislature has taken an interest and projects an involvement. The Alaska congressional delegation has been involved with the federal agencies and is trying to balance of the State of Alaska, the commercial fisherman and subsistence users. Notwithstanding their involvement, the federal agencies are unable to find solutions to advance and resolve the sea otter matters in a timely manner.

Native leadership feels helpless in the face of the above described conflicting positions. The goal of Alaska Natives is to try to create a cottage industry of hunters and handicraft sewers and create a small market place for fur bearing skin products. However, Native leadership does not want to put Indian, Aleuts and Eskimos at legal and financial risk in order to participate in reducing the number of over abundant animals and finally bring the sea otter population into a balanced conservation and protection program that the MMPA contemplates.

Tribal Consultation

President Obama has required departments and agencies to provide for Tribal Consultation on matters affecting Alaska Natives. For many Tribal leaders this executive mandate has become overwhelming. Too many of us, we find it hard to distinguish who is asking for consultation either the Native people with their process and propositions and the government constructs the discussion item (i.e. Rule) in the way of defining an outcome. This is not the type of consultation that Alaska Natives can agree with.

As leaders of our community, we can appreciate a request for consultation. We can even understand that the agency feels like it's a requirement. However, you should see your proposed Rule and request for consultation through our eyes. At the request of the IPCOMM a working group of hunters and handicraft sewers met to consider a definition of "significantly altered." They came up with one. The IPCOMM in concert with the Alaska Federation of Natives advanced and endorsed a resolution constructing a definition. The USFWS published a proposed Rule that in no way responds to the Native supported resolution, aside from rejecting it. It was understood that the department solicitor would take a look at the language and if there were problems the Natives and the agency would meet again. Instead, the USFWS publishes a proposed Rule totally different than the Native proposal. No acknowledgement of the Native proposal is contained in the notice. The governments Rule proposal is legally deficient, contrary to the MMPA statutory intent and court case law, is vague and unclear, and discriminates against some noncoastal Natives and provides for incomplete requirements sure to introduce law enforcement and litigation against Native people. This is not what we need.

Furthermore, in discussions with USFWS staff we found out that the published notice for a Rule to be a Rule or regulation notice for public input is not the intent of the agency. What is going on here? Why is this so? The agency staff tells us that they were trying to do something less than a Rule in order not to incur the input of the public at large. This whole effort smacks of an administrative fiasco. This is not helpful to the Alaska Natives or the public at-large. The question is – how are you going to advance our proposals for Rule making or any that agency wants to advance?

Additionally, we heard that the Tribal liaison for the USFWS says that the IPCOMM and affiliates do not qualify as entities for Tribal consultation. What is going on here? Some or most of the people represented on these entities are Native people or are representing Native people. Many of these people are appointed, elected and are sanctioned by law or the federal administration. Their knowledge, experience, advice and opinion are invaluable. Why does the government consultation and Rule making process not acknowledge and represent their contribution?

All of the above casts a poor light on the DOI-USFWS. But, in our opinion this is not the worst part of it. For several weeks our organizations sent an email request and almost daily phone calls to the Anchorage Director of the US Fish and Wildlife Service. Additionally, we asked other federal agencies and our Alaska delegation offices to further our email request and ask for a response to our telephone inquiries. Both the Sitka Tribe of Alaska and the Juneau Tlingit & Haida Community Council invited the USFWS to come to Juneau and Sitka to hold Tribal consultations. Juneau offered its Tribal Community Hall facility as the venue for such a meeting. For three weeks the government was unresponsive to this offer. When the government finally responded, its representative said that it could not come to Juneau or Sitka because of “Budget Sequestration.” Instead, it offered video teleconferencing or teleconference as an alternative. Native leadership finds that this approach to Tribal consultation as inadequate and unsatisfactory. Also, in the course of discussions the USFWS is not sensitive to the fact that the sea otter overpopulation problem, and the need for a number of Rules and management prescriptions related to the sea otter is a problem largely in the archipelago waters of Southeastern Alaska. Given that fact, it seems realistic to undertake the public process related to Rule making and management issues somewhere in Southeastern Alaska our view is that the government should recognize this situation and come to Southeastern Alaska in order to resolve these issues.

All of this reflects a very sad situation in the course of Alaska Native affairs and the operation of the government.

Where do we go from here? Can the USFWS change its ways? Certainly the confidence and trust relationship between Alaska Natives and the government needs to be improved and regained – or something must be drastically changed.

What could be changed?

1. The government could sit down with Native leadership and hammer out solutions to the Marine Mammal Issues.
2. Alaska Natives could ask the President of the United States to transfer the administration and implementation of the MMPA to the US Department of Commerce – National Marine Fisheries Service.
3. The Alaska Native leadership could request that the Alaska congressional delegation to organize oversight hearings focused on Alaska Natives and the implementation of the Marine Mammal Protection Act, as amended.

The DOI-USFWS needs Alaska Natives. The Alaska Native needs the USFWS in order to successfully accomplish their role in the hunting and handicraft cottage industry development.

Thank you for this opportunity to participate and comment on the Rule making proposals.

Dear Director Dan Ashe, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service:

As a biologist, I strongly urge you to stop efforts to manage fisheries through the use of predator control by loosening the restrictions of what constitutes "significantly altered".

Your current proposed revision to the definition of "significantly altered" - particularly what can be done to a sea otter pelt for handicraft purposes - is far too ambiguous. Not only is your proposed definition too broad, it is at odds with the Marine Mammal Protection Act, especially since it does not result from any significant and empirically based environmental impact analysis.

In fact the analysis to determine the true population status of sea otters in Southeast Alaska is only now getting underway. Therefore questions as to whether the population is at optimum sustainable population levels (and hence could be listed as "depleted" under the MMPA) have yet to be determined. Until such time, FWS should not be allowing any process that could direct more harvest on sea otters in Alaska. Indeed, that the FWS seems prepared to do so, indicates that its decision making processes could be interpreted as being more reliant on politics than on valid scientific and peer-reviewed research.

This is very worrisome, given that it will be easy, with little modification, to turn sea otter pelts into blankets and rugs if the proposed definition is applied. This, in turn, means the FWS proposal would open up the general market to the commercialization of sea otter fur into mass-produced items like blankets and rugs by circumventing the requirement that sea otter fur be significantly altered before being sold to the general public. The lessons of history show how destructive such industry can be to animal populations: remember extinction is forever.

Consequently I request that the FWS do not put forth a definition for "significantly altered" that will be less restrictive of what is made from sea otter pelts and that would put added hunting pressure on sea otters in Southeast Alaska and possibly elsewhere in Alaska.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Lou Baxter

Dear U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

I and my (adult) family members oppose changes to the Marine Mammal Protection Act that would expand the definition of "handicraft" to include nearly unaltered sea otter pelts. Any definition of handicraft should be narrow enough to ensure that sea otter populations are allowed to recover and thrive.

Sea otters play an important role in Alaska and other coastal ecosystems. They need continued protection to fulfill their roles in maintaining balanced food webs and healthy habitats, not treated as predators to be eradicated. Short-sighted perspectives have ruined too many naturally balanced ecosystems; let us NOT repeat history here.

Thank you.

Lys Burden

Section 2:

In the definitions for section 2 – it refers to large-scale mass production. Near the end of the paragraph it indicates that “there can be no manufacturing on a large-scale by means of extensive mechanization or division of labor, such as using a standardized pattern on a large-scale”. Does that mean patterns cannot be used? What if my mother and sisters get together to make hats from a pattern to distribute at a potlatch? Does the Service’s new interpretation mean that they can be fined and imprisoned for such an action? If I attend a class put on by Sealaska about skin sewing sea otter furs, and a pattern is used to teach me how to make a hat, is that punishable under this new definition? What is meant by extensive mechanization or division of labor – if I purchase wool felt from the store for backing to a blanket or scarf, would such a product be prohibited? The non-sea otter part (wool and thread) indeed were produced by extensive mechanization with division of labor. Does the Service mean to prohibit the use of store purchased thread and other materials used in the manufacture of sea otter products?

Here are my comments regarding section 3:

I would hope that the definition of significantly altered from their natural form (section 3) only applies to transfers to non-Native individuals, and even then I feel some hesitation. As an Alaska Native, I do have marine parts which I keep in the raw form to be used as needed. For example, I have a walrus tusk that is mostly in the raw form. About 10 years ago I cut some pieces out to make jewelry. While the tusk is in storage right now, I retain it as such for a future option of use. If I have not traded the tusk away, I intent to use parts of the ivory for the production of jewelry I can give my daughter when she is older, or trade it for something else. Is there a requirement that I must immediately alter the pelt or risk being fined? My children are proud of their Alaska Native heritage, even if they are not 'Native enough' under the Service definition of who is Alaska Native. Do you intend to remove their heritage and identity by limiting what my children can and cannot use? If that is your intent, please consider what removing the heritage of Alaska Natives has done in the past.

3 b. indicates that blankets with only a few stitches is not considered significantly altered. This proposed change does not specify what a ‘few stitches’ are. Does that mean 3, 30, 100, or some other arbitrary and capricious number? If a specific number of stitches are specified then does that mean the Service will be counting the stitches? Earlier in the same paragraph it is suggested that a pelt would be significantly altered when the hide is devoid of the head, feet and tail (i.e. blocked). When that is coupled with 3 b, including backing or lining and stitched around the edges than that seems substantially dear. However, does this apply to transferring to non-Native individuals, or to everybody? Would the Service fine and incarcerate a mother (who is Alaska Native) that keeps her baby warm with a sea otter blanket because the blanket does not have a lining sewn on the back (not significantly altered)? This mandate omits the fact that truly traditional blankets made from sea otter fur did not have a backing and as such did not have stitches. This rule prohibits Alaska Natives from making traditional blankets.

Do these new interpretations mandate that we change our traditions to conform to prohibitions imposed by the U.S. government – is that really the intent of the Service?

Here are my comments as to who the Service defines as Alaska Native:

My son is deeply disappointed that he cannot hunt sea otters with me because the Service rejects his heritage as being insufficient (he is only 1/8 Alaska Native). He still carries on many Alaska Native traditions – for example, the first fish he caught (when he was three) he gave to an elder. He accompanies me when we deliver our first catch of fish each year to elders. He also dances proudly and keeps begging me to make in a traditional drum. He and his siblings listen intently as I share stories of our ancestors, and I hear him share those with others. I’ll do what I can to help ensure that he and all my children are proud of their identity. Please do seek to further take away my children’s identity by imposing onerous rules that have the effect of eroding the heritage of my children.

There are profound and serious effects when heritage and identity are stripped from individuals. I do not feel that the experience of my grandmother was singular. Consider other the suicide rate of Alaska Natives, the disproportionate number of Alaska Native children in foster care, or of the many other issues. These have been brought about in large measure due to policies and regulations designed to strip the heritage of Alaska Natives from our identity. Fortunately, most of this 'legacy' policies and regulations have since been done away with. I sincerely hope that the Service will consider the outcomes of your actions and if they will continue to strip the heritage and identity of Alaska Natives or if they will recognize that Alaska Natives have a heritage that is worth keeping, like so many other Federal entitites do today.

Thank you for the opportunity to comment.

Dear Sir,

Alaska Representative Donald Young has introduced a bill to restart the fur trade of northern sea otters. Bill (H.R. 2714), seeks To amend the Marine Mammal Protection Act of 1972 to allow the transport, purchase, and sale of pelts of, and handicrafts, garments, and art produced from, Southcentral and Southeast Alaska northern sea otters.

The International Union for Conservation of Nature still lists the sea otter as an endangered species, and describes the most significant threat to sea otters as oil pollution from, oil spills. The Exxon Valdez oil spill of 24 March 1989 killed thousands of sea otters and the lingering oil in the area continues to affect the population. All sea otters are protected under the Marine Mammal Protection Act which makes it illegal to hunt a sea otter or sell any products made from the body of a sea otter, unless the sea otter is harvested by an Alaskan Native for subsistence purposes.

The population growth of the Northern sea otter is near an all-time low and harvest rates have more than doubled in the last few years. With the ever looming threat of Alaska oil drilling, this is no time to even consider removing the sea otter from current protections.

I urge you to oppose changes to weaken current protections of Alaska's sea otters.

"Aren't humans amazing? They kill wildlife - birds, deer, all kinds of cats, coyotes, beavers, groundhogs, mice and foxes by the million in order to protect their domestic animals and their feed. Then they kill domestic animals by the billion and eat them. This in turn kills people by the million, because eating all those animals leads to degenerative - and fatal - health conditions like heart disease, stroke, kidney disease, and cancer. So then humans spend billions of dollars torturing and killing millions more animals to look for cures for these diseases. Elsewhere, millions of other human beings are being killed by hunger and malnutrition because food they could eat is being used to fatten domestic animals. The new suggestion as to what "significantly altered" means is much too ambiguous, flies in the face of the protection provided under the Marine Mammal Protection Act, and is does not address the overall impact on the environment.

Lets be honest here with what the real problem is. It is not the population numbers of the sea otters, but rather the impacts of a human population that has still not learned to live sustainably, not overfish, not over populate, and not pollute.

MARINE MAMMAL COMMISSION

17 May 2013

Deborah Pierce Williams, Supervisor
Marine Mammals Management Office
U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
1011 East Tudor Road, MS-341
Anchorage, Alaska 99503

Dear Ms. Pierce Williams:

The Marine Mammal Commission, in consultation with its Committee of Scientific Advisors on Marine Mammals, has reviewed the 1 March 2013 document posted on the Fish and Wildlife Service's Web site requesting public comments on the Service's interpretation of select terms under the Marine Mammal Protection Act as they pertain to the taking of sea otters by Alaska Natives (<http://alaska.fws.gov/fisheries/mmm/current.htm>). Specifically, those terms are (1) "dwells on the coast," (2) "large-scale mass production," and (3) "significantly altered from their natural form." The Marine Mammal Commission provides the following recommendations and rationale.

RECOMMENDATIONS

The Marine Mammal Commission recommends that the Fish and Wildlife Service—

- provide additional legislative background regarding the Native handicraft exception in the final guidance document clarifying the term "significantly altered from their natural form," because understanding the Congressional intent is key to properly delineating what degree of alteration is required to constitute a handicraft;
- discuss the enforcement considerations behind the significantly altered requirement and factor such considerations into its guidance;
- clarify whether those who purchase and legally possess handicraft items may alter them;
- consider whether a broader and more formal clarification (e.g., through the promulgation of regulations) of the term "significantly altered" should be pursued;
- amend the proposed guidance to differentiate more clearly those items that it considers to be significantly altered from those that are not;
- adopt guidance based in part on whether an item can be converted back into something approximating its original form (e.g., a more or less intact hide);
- consider issuing joint guidance or regulations with the National Marine Fisheries Service if there is a need to clarify the meaning of the term "dwells on the coast of the North Pacific Ocean or the Arctic Ocean" as used in section 101(b) of the Act;
- adopt the proposed guidance interpreting the term "large-scale mass production" but, as with other aspects of the guidance, consider broadening the definition to apply to other marine mammal species and codifying this guidance through regulations issued jointly with the National Marine Fisheries Service;

- expand the guidance document to provide clarification on when hunting of sea otters would be considered wasteful;
- publish a notice of availability of the draft in the Federal Register and extend the public comment period by an additional 30 to 60 days before finalizing the clarification document.

RATIONALE

Section 101(b) of the Marine Mammal Protection Act authorizes “any Indian, Aleut, or Eskimo who resides in Alaska and who dwells on the coast of the North Pacific Ocean or the Arctic Ocean” to take marine mammals for subsistence purposes or for purposes of creating and selling authentic articles of handicrafts and clothing, provided that, in each case, the taking is not accomplished in a wasteful manner. Section 101(b)(2) includes a definition of what constitutes “authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing” and provides a partial list of the types of activities considered to be “traditional native handicrafts” (i.e., weaving, carving, stitching, sewing, lacing, beading, drawing, and painting). The Service has provided further interpretation of the Act’s requirements through regulations published at 50 C.F.R. §§ 18.3 and 18.23. Two of the terms that the Service seeks to clarify have their origin in the regulatory definition of the term “authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing.”

The Service defines “authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing” to mean—items made by an Indian, Aleut, or Eskimo that (a) are composed wholly or in some significant respect of natural materials and (b) are significantly altered from their natural form and are produced, decorated, or fashioned in the exercise of traditional native handicrafts without the use of pantographs, multiple carvers, or similar mass-copying devices. Improved methods of production utilizing modern implements such as sewing machines or modern techniques at a tannery registered pursuant to § 18.23(c) may be used so long as no large-scale mass-production industry results. Traditional native handicrafts include, but are not limited to, weaving, carving, stitching, sewing, lacing, beading, drawing, and painting. The formation of traditional native groups, such as cooperatives, is permitted so long as no large-scale mass production results [emphasis added].

To a large extent this definition tracks the wording of the underlying statutory provisions. The key differences are (1) a requirement that such items be significantly altered from their natural form, (2) a clarification that those producing authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing may use improved methods of production utilizing modern implements such as sewing machines and modern tanning processes, so long as no large-scale mass-production industry results, and (3) a finding that the formation of traditional native groups such as cooperatives is allowed, provided that no large-scale mass-production results.

The Commission believes that these regulatory embellishments are an appropriate exercise of the Service’s regulatory authority under section 112(a) of the Act and are consistent with the legislative intent behind the handicraft exception. The provisions concerning improved production methods and formation of cooperatives are drawn directly from the legislative history of the Act as originally enacted (see S. REP. NO. 863, 92d Cong., 2d Sess. at 14 (1972)). In contrast, the term “significantly altered” appears nowhere in the pertinent legislative reports. Nevertheless, that requirement is in keeping with the available legislative history.

Significantly altered

In supporting the inclusion of the handicraft exception in the Act, Senator Ted Stevens stated that “[f]or many of the Alaskan Natives, the selling of their handicrafts, fashioned painstakingly and with great skill from ocean mammals is the sole basis of their cash economy.”<sup>1</sup> Later, Senator Stevens noted that “[t]his is an industry of Native manufacture, handicrafts and carving—wonderfully intricate hand-carved bones and tusks, decorated parkas and boats, completely waterproof and ideally suited for the rugged outdoor life lived in that far part of the world.”<sup>2</sup> Senator Stevens also provided a display of Native handicrafts on loan from the University of Alaska for his colleagues to view as they considered the need for a handicraft exception. That display, he observed, “not only... accurately portray[s] the dependence of my people on these animals, but more importantly, it indicates to all of us the extent of their civilization and their present needs.”<sup>3</sup>

All of these statements suggest that Congress envisioned authentic native articles of handicrafts or clothing to be an artistic endeavor, requiring significant, skilled, and even intricate workmanship. Merely stitching otherwise unworked skins together, although arguably within the statutory requirements (in that the item is “composed wholly or in some significant respect of natural materials” and is produced by sewing or stitching) falls short of what Congress had in mind in enacting the handicraft exception in that it lacks the requisite skill and degree of workmanship. The regulatory overlay provided by the “significantly altered” requirement thus provides a useful and acceptable means of delineating the extent of work required to convert raw materials into an article of handicraft. The Congressional Record does not provide a list of the items on display in the Senate chamber as it considered the Alaska Native exemption in 1972. If the Service is able to find such a list, it might give the best indication of what types of items and degree of alteration Congress had in mind when it used the term authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing in the Marine Mammal Protection Act. The Marine Mammal Commission recommends that, in the final guidance document clarifying the term “significantly altered from their natural form,” the Fish and Wildlife Service provide additional legislative background regarding the Native handicraft exception because understanding the Congressional intent is key to properly delineating what degree of alteration is required to constitute a handicraft.

The requirement that marine mammal parts be significantly altered from their natural form also serves an important enforcement function. Congress considered and rejected a broader exemption that would have allowed Alaska Natives to trade in raw, unworked marine mammal parts. Similarly, Congress limited the opportunities for non-Natives to take marine mammals and gain access to marine mammal parts, establishing a rigorous waiver process for such authorizations. It would therefore be inconsistent with Congressional intent if non-Natives could easily acquire unaltered or minimally worked marine mammal parts as handicrafts that then could easily be converted back to, or near to, their raw form. Enforcement considerations are relevant factors in determining whether a marine mammal or marine mammal part has been sufficiently altered from its natural form to prevent reversion to, or near to, a raw product from which other items could be fashioned. In the case of sea otters, for example, a very skillful and artistic painting could be made on the back of a whole pelt. Clearly, such an item is made wholly or in some significant part from natural materials. Likewise, its method of manufacture (painting) is one of the traditional native handicrafts specified in section 101(b)(2) of the Marine Mammal Protection Act. Nevertheless, it should not be considered to be significantly altered, because it is, in essence, a whole pelt that could be used by a non-Native to make other items merely by turning it over. Although perhaps difficult to implement, one possible test in allowing such items to be marketed is whether the intact handicraft item is worth considerably more than the raw materials from which that particular item is made. The Marine Mammal Commission recommends that in the final guidance document clarifying the term “significantly altered from their natural form” the Fish and Wildlife Service discuss the enforcement considerations behind the significantly altered requirement and factor such considerations into its guidance.

Enforcement considerations apply not only to those making and selling authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing, but to those who purchase them. In this regard, the Marine Mammal Commission recommends that the Fish and Wildlife Service discuss what those who purchase and legally possess such items may do with them. May they convert them into something else or is possession legal only so long as the handicraft is unaltered? The answer hinges largely on the Service’s interpretation of section 102(a)(3) of the Act, which prohibits any person from possessing a marine mammal or any product from a marine mammal that was taken in violation of the Act. Specifically, does possession of an altered handicraft remain legal because the initial taking to create the handicraft was legal, or does it become illegal because the legality of the underlying taking is dependent on continued use of the mammal or its parts for handicraft purposes? If the Service believes that it is illegal for someone to use the marine mammal parts contained in authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing to create some other product, this presents a second enforcement opportunity against those who might exploit the handicraft exception to acquire marine mammal parts for unauthorized purposes. To the extent that there is this second chance to enforce the Act to ensure that the handicraft exception is not abused, then more leeway might be afforded at the creation step, figuring that the Service could take action against those who seek to convert handicrafts into other products.

Although the Service might be able to enforce the Act against those who alter or convert handicrafts and who are subject to U.S. jurisdiction, it has little recourse against those who might do so in other countries. Thus, the Service should consider its enforcement opportunities for handicrafts that are exported in determining how significant the alteration of a sea otter must be to qualify as authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing. Sea otters are listed on Appendix II of the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora (CITES). As such, export permits must be obtained unless the items fit within the CITES personal and household effects exceptions. It does not seem likely that commercial quantities of sea otter products could be exported without a permit or permits being issued. If it appears that sea otter handicrafts are being exported in ways or in quantities that may raise concerns, the Service might have certain remedies. First, before issuing a permit, the Service would need to make a non-detriment finding. That is, it would need to determine that the level of taking does not pose risks to the survival of sea otter stocks.

In the case of handicrafts, the Service might have further latitude to control exports if it detects a problem with how items are being used after they are exported. The 1994 amendments to the Marine Mammal Protection Act added a prohibition on exporting any marine mammal or marine mammal product that is taken in violation of the Act or for any purpose other than public display, scientific research, or enhancing the survival of a species or stock, except as provided in section 101 or other listed sections of the Act. Section 101(b), crafted well before enactment of the 1994 amendments, is silent on the question of whether exports of authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing are authorized. Although the Service has issued a policy statement interpreting the provision as authorizing exports, this is not explicit in the statute and could be amended by the agency.

The Commission supports the Service's efforts to clarify what constitutes sufficient transformation of marine mammal parts to comport with the significantly altered requirement of its regulations. Although the need for such clarification may be most acute with respect to items made from sea otters, more general guidance applicable to other marine mammals (e.g., walrus and polar bears) utilized by Alaska Natives also would be helpful. Further in this regard, the National Marine Fisheries Service, which is responsible for conserving and managing other marine mammal species, has adopted a similar definition of what qualifies as "authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing" (50 C.F.R. § 216.3). Although handicraft traditions and the parts and processes used to fashion handicrafts may vary depending on the species, the basic guidance on what constitutes significant alteration should be consistent among species and across the two agencies. The Marine Mammal Commission therefore recommends that the Fish and Wildlife Service and the National Marine Fisheries Service consider whether a broader and more formal clarification (e.g., through the promulgation of regulations) of the term "significantly altered" should be pursued. As an interim measure, the Commission believes that providing guidance specific to sea otters—as the Service has proposed—is a good first step.

In its proposed guidance the Service proposes to clarify the term "significantly altered" by explaining that hides must be "substantially changed." The Commission recognizes the difficulty in crafting guidance that clearly delineates the dividing line between items made from marine mammal parts that have been significantly altered from their natural form and those that have not. At the extremes, the differentiation is straightforward. Clearly, sea otter hides that have been transformed into mittens, hats, mukluks, or purses meet the test. Likewise, items fashioned from whole pelts with only minimal stitching that "can be easily converted back to an unaltered piece of hide" do not. It is for items in the middle ground that guidance is most needed and for which the clarification proposed by the Service falls short. However, without further clarification, the replacement of one ambiguous term ("significantly altered") with another equivalent, but equally ambiguous term ("substantially changed") does little to resolve the issue.

The Commission also questions some of the examples provided in the Service's draft guidance. One of the tests proposed by the Service is whether items can be easily converted back into an unaltered hide. The Commission agrees that this is an appropriate standard, which among other things serves an important enforcement function. Some of the examples given for items that have been significantly altered, however, do not appear to meet this test. For example, our understanding is that a “neck roll” is basically a blocked hide that is rolled into a cylinder and held together with stitching at the margins. It can be converted back into an unaltered hide merely by removing the stitching and unrolling it. Similarly, placement of blankets in both the significantly altered and not significantly altered categories is confusing. Is it the number of stitches used to hold the hides together or the application of a lining that makes the difference? In both cases, the hides can be separated (albeit with a bit more work if there are more stitches) and any backing removed, so that one is left with largely unaltered hides in either case. Consistent with the discussion above, the Marine Mammal Commission recommends that the Fish and Wildlife Service amend the proposed guidance to differentiate more clearly those items that it considers to be significantly altered from those that are not. The Marine Mammal Commission further recommends that the Service base its guidance, in part, on whether the item can be converted back into something approximating its original form (e.g., a more or less intact hide). This is not to say that such items cannot be made and used by Alaska Natives for subsistence purposes, only that they could not be sold to non-Natives as authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing.

Dwells on the coast

The Commission does not think that basic interpretations of generally applicable terms used in the Marine Mammal Protection Act should vary by species or between the two agencies with regulatory authority to carry out the Act. Consistent with this view, the Commission has some concern that the Fish and Wildlife Service is proposing guidance on what the term “dwells on the coast” means specific to sea otters. Based on that concern, the Marine Mammal Commission recommends that the Fish and Wildlife Service consider issuing joint guidance or regulations with the National Marine Fisheries Service if it has a need to clarify the meaning of the term “dwells on the coast of the North Pacific Ocean or the Arctic Ocean,” as used in section 101(b) of the Act.

Having said this, the guidance proposed by the Service seems appropriate for sea otters and many other marine mammal species. The Commission’s interpretation of the proposed clarification is that it would apply not only to those Natives living along coastal areas but also to those further inland that may encounter marine mammals (e.g., at Lake Iliamna, which has a population of harbor seals). The Commission is concerned, however, that the proposed definition may not include the full scope of Alaska Natives that traditionally use marine mammals for subsistence and/or handicraft purposes. For example, Nuiqsut—one of the Native villages that participates in the bowhead whale hunt—is about 35 miles inland from the Beaufort Sea waters where hunting occurs. It is unclear how close to the coast one must dwell to be considered living “adjacent to waters that are tidally influenced.” This should be clarified and, if need be, the proposed definition expanded to encompass the full suite of Alaska Natives who hunt marine mammals traditionally.

Large-scale mass production

The guidance provided by the Service to clarify this term seems appropriate and provides additional, useful examples on what it considers to be prohibited mass copying devices. The Marine Mammal Commission recommends that the Fish and Wildlife Service adopt the proposed guidance interpreting the term “large-scale mass production” but, as with other aspects of the guidance, consider broadening the definition to apply to other marine mammal species. Because this is a generally applicable term under the Act, the Service should consider codifying this guidance through regulations issued jointly with the National Marine Fisheries Service.

Wasteful taking

Except for a passing mention that “some parties are concerned that the take of sea otters will increase if our clarification of the term ‘significantly altered’ is perceived as being more permissive,” little context about the controversy surrounding sea otters in Southeast Alaska is provided in the draft guidance document. The Commission agrees with the Service’s assessment that the proposed clarification in these terms “is not the appropriate tool to use to manage [the] harvest of sea otter populations.” Nevertheless, the Commission is concerned about statements that some Natives anticipate increasing their hunting of sea otters based on what they expect to be more permissive guidance. The Marine Mammal Protection Act does not place a numerical limit on the allowable take of marine mammals for subsistence or for creating and selling authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing and the Service may establish them only if the affected stock is determined to be depleted and such limits are established through formal rulemaking. At the same time, the Service should do all that it can to ensure that any sea otter taken is used for a legitimate subsistence or handicraft purpose. This may be difficult at times, because a hunter’s motive in taking an otter (subsistence/handicraft use versus reducing fisheries conflicts) may be difficult to discern.

In this regard, the guidance offered by the district court in Didrickson v. U.S. Department of the Interior, 796 F. Supp. 1281 (D. Alaska 1991), is instructive. The court concluded that—

This opinion should not be construed as authorizing a “free-for-all” killing of hundreds of sea otters. All that has been said is that the Secretary of Interior, through the FWS, does not have the authority to regulate the harvesting of sea otters for purposes of creating native handicrafts absent a finding of depletion. This does not mean the FWS has somehow lost its enforcement powers, particularly with regard to the requirement that the takings not be wasteful. Moreover, a particular article must still satisfy the statutory definition of “authentic.”

The Service’s guidance is focused entirely on the question of whether an article meets the definition of authentic. It does not describe when a taking would be considered wasteful. Clearly, failure to use all the usable parts of an animal would raise concerns. However, it would be useful if the Service were to provide guidance as to whether limiting use of a sea otter to its pelt alone would be considered a wasteful practice. Additional guidance also should be provided as to when overall hunting would be considered wasteful. Specifically, in the handicraft realm, to what extent is wasteful taking governed by what Native artisans can produce as opposed to what the market will absorb? On a related point, to what extent are Native hunters allowed to stockpile raw materials for eventual conversion into authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing without running afoul of the wasteful taking limitation? In light of these unresolved questions, and the possibility that the taking of sea otters might be driven by motives other than subsistence need or the desire to create and sell authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing, the Marine Mammal Commission recommends that the Fish and Wildlife Service also provide clarification on when hunting of sea otters would be considered wasteful.

Procedural considerations

From the outset, the Fish and Wildlife Service has indicated that the proposed clarifications of its regulations as they pertain to authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing made from sea otters provide non-binding guidance only. As such, these clarifications do not require rulemaking. Further, the Service believes that it could have issued this guidance without any public notice and comment process at all. Nevertheless, the Service decided to solicit comments from interested parties by posting the draft clarification document on the regional office's Web site and by providing actual notice to the Alaska Congressional delegation, selected agencies, affected Tribes, and various organizations, either via e-mail or telephone. Despite suggestions that it do so from the Commission's staff and others, the Service thus far has declined to publish a broader notice and solicitation of comments in the Federal Register.

As reflected in its other comments, the Commission believes that several issues raised in the draft clarification document have relevance and applicability beyond sea otters. The terms for which clarification is proposed are generally applicable to all authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing made from marine mammals by Alaska Natives and to species under the jurisdiction of both the Fish and Wildlife Service and the National Marine Fisheries Service. For these reasons, it would be beneficial if the two agencies issued joint guidance interpreting the terms "significantly altered from their natural form," "dwells on the coast," and "large-scale mass production." As indicated above, notice and comment rulemaking, or at least the issuance of a joint policy statement applicable to all marine mammal species taken for purposes of creating and selling authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing would be appropriate.

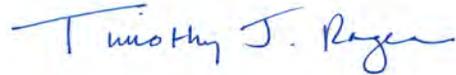

In making these recommendations, the Commission recognizes that the parts and processes used to make authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing vary considerably among species. The types of items made from sea otter fur are quite different from those made from walrus ivory or bowhead whale baleen. Despite this, there should be some common principles that apply when determining whether raw marine mammal parts have been altered sufficiently to qualify as authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing. Such broadly applicable guidance should be provided before trying to particularize that guidance to specific species or handicraft techniques.

The Commission supports the Service's decision to seek input from interested parties and the public before adopting the proposed clarifications. However, we are concerned about the limited notice and distribution of the proposal. Although circulated to targeted constituencies and posted on the region's Website, the Service made no general announcement of the availability of the proposed policy and did not solicit comment in the more usual way (e.g., through publication in the Federal Register). Thus, not everyone who has interest in these issues or who may want to comment may have been apprised of that opportunity. Without getting into whether and, if so, what sort of public notice and comment opportunity is legally required or appropriate, the Commission believes that, from a policy perspective, the Service should conduct a process that is as inclusive and transparent as possible. Such a process would be in keeping with the applicable open government initiatives and directives. For these reasons, the Marine Mammal Commission recommends that the Fish and Wildlife Service, before finalizing the clarification document, publish a notice of availability of the draft in the Federal Register and extend the public comment period by an additional 30 to 60 days.

Dear Mr. Ashe:

I have been reading newspaper articles urging increased take of sea otters, mainly because of competition with fishing interests. It has taken a long time for sea otters to recover, but it would not take long to undo this progress. I have serious concerns about changing the definition of "Significantly altered" with regards to the sale of sea otter pelts. Watering down this definition to simply allow blankets or rugs with little or no artistic alteration on the pelt will open up the quick processing of pelts into blankets and rugs for quick sale or export. This could escalate into a huge market because it would take so little time to prepare these products as compared to those that require adding significant artistic alterations.

It is important to understand all the population dynamics here. Are otters beyond their carrying capacity? How much subsistence take can the population sustain? Certainly if no significant alteration is required to the pelts, the harvest will likely increase, possibly beyond a reasonable take. Please err on the side of caution and keep a strong definition of "significantly altered" and avoid the potential of sea otter market hunting.

Sincerely,

Nina Faust

Dear Mr. Haskett:

The National Marine Fisheries Service (NMFS) has reviewed the U.S. Fish & Wildlife Service's (USFWS) "Draft Clarification of Select Terms under the Marine Mammal Protection Act in Regard to Sea Otters" dated March 1, 2013. We offer the enclosed comments for your consideration.

NMFS and USFWS share responsibility for implementing the Marine Mammal Protection Act (MMPA), and both agencies face similar issues regarding interpretation of the MMPA relative to Alaska Native subsistence activities and handicrafts. While we understand that your proposed policy clarification is focused on sea otters, which are under USFWS jurisdiction, the principles and terms are relevant to NMFS-managed species as well.

We look forward to a continued good working relationship with USFWS regarding marine mammal issues in Alaska.

Sincerely,

James W. Balsiger, Ph.D.

Comments on the U.S. Fish & Wildlife Service's (USFWS) Proposed Clarification of Select Terms under the Marine Mammal Protection Act
May 15, 2013

1. Dwells on the Coast

NMFS and USFWS regulations use slightly different terms to refer to coastal residency. USFWS regulations at 50 CFR 18.23(a) state (emphasis added):

Taking. Except as otherwise provided in part 403 of this title, any Indian, Aleut, or Eskimo who resides in Alaska and who dwells on the coast of the North Pacific Ocean or the Arctic Ocean may take any marine mammal without a permit, subject to the restrictions contained in this section, if such taking is:

- (1) For subsistence purposes, or
- (2) For purposes of creating and selling authentic native articles of handicraft and clothing, and
- (3) In each case, not accomplished in a wasteful manner.

NMFS regulations at 50 CFR 216.23(a) state (emphasis added):

Taking. Notwithstanding the prohibitions of subpart B of this part 216, but subject to the restrictions contained in this section, any Indian, Aleut, or Eskimo who resides on the coast of the North Pacific Ocean or the Arctic Ocean may take any marine mammal without a permit, if such taking is:

- (1) By Alaskan Natives who reside in Alaska for subsistence, or
- (2) For purposes of creating and selling authentic native articles of handicraft and clothing, and
- (3) In each case, not accomplished in a wasteful manner.

The proposed USFWS policy interpretation for “dwells on the coast” is as follows:

Dwells on the coast refers to residing in Alaska and living permanently in an area or community that is adjacent to waters that are tidally influenced or in an area commonly inhabited and used by marine mammals.

NMFS has determined that for purposes of interpreting NMFS’s regulations, “living permanently in an area or community that is adjacent to waters that are tidally influenced or in an area commonly inhabited and used by marine mammals” is a problematic standard because (1) permanency may be difficult to establish; (2) the concept of adjacency to waters used by marine mammals is not sufficiently broad to account for Alaska Natives who may live somewhat inland yet traditionally rely upon subsistence use of marine mammals; and (3) in some cases marine mammals migrate upstream into freshwater areas beyond tidal influence and beyond areas they commonly inhabit. NMFS plans to continue to interpret the term “resides on the coast” in 50 CFR 216.23(a) to mean that a person primarily lives in an area of Alaska that is in close proximity to waters used by marine mammals.

2. Large Scale Mass Production

Regulations promulgated by NMFS (50 CFR 216.3) and USFWS (50 CFR 18.3) both use the term “large scale mass production” in the definition of an “article of handicraft” or “authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing”:

The formation of traditional native groups, such as a cooperative, is permitted so long as no large scale mass production results.

The proposed USFWS policy interpretation for “large scale mass production” is as follows:

Large-scale mass production refers to the use of mass copying devices such as pantographs, multiple carvers, embroidery machines, cutting presses, stencils, transfers, stamps, and/or the use of assembly line production. The formation of traditional Native groups or cooperatives and the use of modern implements such as sewing machines are permitted. However, there can be no manufacturing on a large-scale by means of extensive mechanization or division of labor, such as using a standardized pattern on a large-scale.

NMFS notes that USFWS’s proposed interpretation does not clarify the term “large scale” which arguably is the most important part of the regulation. Enforcing this portion of the regulation would likely require NMFS or USFWS to evaluate subjectively the scale of observed production of handicrafts as compared to common traditional practices. The proposed policy interpretation may not add much value if subjective assessment of factual circumstances will still be required.

3. Significantly Altered From Their Natural Form

Regulations promulgated by NMFS (50 CFR 216.3) and USFWS (50 CFR 18.3) both use the term “significantly altered from their natural form” in the definition of an “article of handicraft” or “authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing.”

The proposed USFWS policy interpretation for “significantly altered from their natural form” is as follows:

a. In order to be considered significantly altered from its natural form, a tanned, dried, cured, or preserved part of a sea otter hide, devoid only of the head, feet, and tail (i.e., blocked), or any other remaining parts of the hide, must be substantially changed through means including, but not limited to: weaving, carving, stitching, sewing, lacing, beading, drawing, painting, or other handicrafting methods. Examples of significantly altered items include those items typically known as: mitten; hats; neck rolls; gloves; mukluks; purses; and blankets or scarves made from a hide or pieces of hide with a backing or lining and stitched around the edges.

b. Items will not be considered significantly altered from their natural form where merely minimal changes have been made to a hide devoid only of the head, feet, and tail (i.e., blocked), and where those items can be easily converted back to an unaltered piece of hide. Examples of items not considered to be significantly altered include: a cape that consists of a large hide with a single button neck closure; a hide that has been drawn on with a marker; a blanket with a few stitches.

NMFS agrees that for an item to be “significantly altered” it must be substantially changed through means such as those listed in (a) above. NMFS is not prepared to conclude that drawing on a hide with a marker or putting “a few stitches” in an item are not sufficient modifications to constitute being “significantly altered.” For example, in most cases NMFS would consider a drawing with indelible ink on the hide side of a tanned Northern fur seal pelt to be a handicraft. Likewise, NMFS would generally consider stitching to be an indicator that an item has been “significantly altered” and NMFS would find it problematic to define a requisite number of stitches. As another example, in most cases NMFS would consider whale baleen that has been cleaned and polished to be a handicraft.

Questions to the USF&W Draft Clarification

1. Dwells on the Coast. Permanently.

What are we saying with the use of this word? Are we talking about a domicile? Rather than clarify, this just raises another question to me as to how do we establish permanent. Is living with a family member considered permanent? For how long?

2. Large-scale Mass Production. Large scale

We can clearly follow the devices that cannot be used, however, large scale is still not defined and in the end, is THE MOST important part of this regulation. Exceptions are even made within this clarification for groups or cooperatives and modern implements. This brings the whole question down to WHAT IS LARGE SCALE? Is it a specific number or art pieces or a dollar figure or is it undefined and based on the circumstances? If it is the latter, there is no need to even have this “clarification” that does not specify.

3. Significantly Altered From Their Natural Form. Marker.

Why specifically say marker? What about paint? Also, is there a threshold that would make a "Drawing or Painting" significantly altered? Drawing and painting are both listed in the regulation as an example of the handicraft that can be used. We are not art appraisers and just because we think it's a bad drawing, attempting to get around the regulation, does that mean it is?

Few Stitches.

Sewing is allowed and listed as a way to alter. Without knowing seam work, how many stitches are enough?

We would recommend not including the listed examples and leave the definition as “not being easily converted back to an unaltered hide. “

RE: Comments regarding USFWS draft clarification of select terms under the Marine Mammal Protection Act (MMPA) in regard to sea otters

To Whom It May Concern:

We, the following members of the Southeast Alaska Ocean Products Cluster, are writing to express support for the draft clarification of select terms under the MMPA in regard to sea otters – as it represents as a small step towards finding solutions to conserve our shellfish species in Southeast Alaska (SEA) in balance with a healthy sea otter population, and a thriving marine ecosystem.

The Southeast Alaska Ocean Products Cluster was formed in an effort to catalyze regional economic development in Southeast Alaska. The Cluster brings together leaders in this important industry sector in order to troubleshoot obstacles and identify opportunities for growth. The Cluster has been meeting for the past year to analyze the needs of the seafood industry in order to provide the region with the maximum sustainable benefits from its ocean resources. The Cluster has identified ten initiatives which address the current needs of the industry. One of the ten initiatives identified by the Cluster was titled, “Develop a Sea Otter Management Program in Southeast Alaska”.

Recent research by the U.S. Fish & Wildlife Service (USFWS) has documented the following facts about the sea otter population in SEA. The sea otter population is approximately 25,000 and growing at 12-14% per year. These marine mammals consume shellfish at a rate of approximately 25% of their body weight (average of 65 lbs) each day, equating to an average annual shellfish harvest of 148 million pounds. Projecting this growth out to the year 2018, the sea otter population will be approximately 50,000 and the annual shellfish harvest by otters will be approximately 300 million pounds. By comparison, the entire shellfish harvest by commercial fishermen in the region is less than 10 million pounds annually.

The recovery of sea otters in SE Alaska is a conservation success story. However, at this point, the otter population is expanding so rapidly that it is decimating the shellfish populations in SEA and an ecosystem management plan needs to be implemented to avoid a crash of the shellfish populations and, consequently, the otter population. The decimation of the shellfish populations has been documented by commercial divers, fishermen, subsistence users and dive biologists at the Alaska Dept. of Fish & Game. If the growth of the sea otter population is not reduced, not only will all commercial shellfish harvests in SEA be closed, but also sport, personal use and subsistence harvests will end, and the otter population will eventually crash as a result.

Clarification of these terms will encourage the legal harvest of sea otters by Alaska Natives by offering some assurance of what is legal, which will help to preserve shellfish species and provide a source of economic activity in rural Native villages in SEA which have very little economies.

However, we hope that this is only the beginning of productive discussions and actions taken by USFWS regarding proactive sea otter management. The reality is that if the sea otter population is not actively managed through the use of science, data, and sustainable harvest levels, the entire near-shore ecosystem of Southeast Alaska will be in jeopardy.

For instance, we suggest USFWS promulgate revised regulations which delete the phrase “significantly altered”, and align the regulations more closely with the original legislation (MMPA). Nowhere does this phrase occur in the MMPA (see below):

“(2) is done for purposes of creating and selling authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing: Provided, That only authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing may be sold in interstate commerce: And provided further, That any edible portion of marine mammals may be sold in native villages and towns in Alaska or for native consumption. For the purposes of this subsection, the term “authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing” means items composed wholly or in some significant respect of natural materials, and which are produced, decorated, or fashioned in the exercise of traditional native handicrafts without the use of pantographs, multiple carvers, or other mass copying devices. Traditional native handicrafts include, but are not limited to weaving, carving, stitching, sewing, lacing, beading, drawing and painting”

In our experience, the term “significantly altered” has been used to the detriment of Alaska Natives. It is not the job of the agency to try to restrict the allowable uses, but rather to allow Alaskan Natives an opportunity to engage in commerce producing authentic Native articles of handicrafts and clothing, as is stated in the MMPA.

Additionally, we strongly encourage USFWS to invest funding into science, data and management, instead of investing in enforcement - such as the recent undercover sting operations which could be interpreted as entrapment of Alaska Natives. At this point in history, the public policy concern in Southeast Alaska is not the protection of sea otters, but sustainable ecosystem management of otters.

We also suggest USFWS consider a “carrot” approach, instead of a “stick” approach to compliance of Alaska Natives with the MMPA. USFWS has publicly stated that the harvest of sea otters in Southeast Alaska could be as many as 2,180 animals while still allowing the stock to reach or maintain its optimal sustainable population. The average annual harvest of sea otters over the past five years has been 587. A more effective and inexpensive approach for assuring compliance with the law considering the current minimal risk to the sustainability of the stock may be through education, training, and regular open communication with Alaska Natives regarding legal harvesting regulations and otter populations. By developing a two-way dialogue with Alaska Natives, USFWS may also learn more local knowledge about populations, movement and effective management strategies. However, without this two-way dialogue, trust will be difficult to build between these two groups.

Thank you for your attention and work on this issue.

Sincerely,

The following members of the Southeast Alaska Ocean Products Cluster:

Julie Decker, commercial fisherman, Ocean Products Cluster Co-Chair

Phil Doherty, commercial fisherman, Southeast Alaska Dive Fisheries Association

Dear Director Dan Ashe, U.S. Fish & Wildlife Service:

I have lived in SE Alaska for 45 years and recently attended a non-biased scientific seminar on sea otters. Then I watched with amazement as our Alaska Legislature tried to place a bounty on Sea otters. You probably know the incredible backward approach that finally passed – all too prevalent an approach in this state. I count on you to be ecologically smarter than our legislature. Please don't buy into predator control of sea otters by liberalizing restrictions on what constitutes "significantly altered". Your recent suggested revised definition of "significantly altered" as to what can be done to a sea otter pelt for handicraft purposes buys in to back door - predator control. I've watched what goes on here too long to see it any differently.

Please take the Marine Mammal Protection Act seriously. Require an environmental impact analysis! You will otherwise make it easy to turn sea otter pelts into blankets and rugs with little modification. Add that the state will give funds to assist in the kill of sea otters, you can't seriously be going along with this ruse.

The FWS proposal stands to lead to commercialization of sea otter fur into mass-produced items like blankets and rugs, by circumventing the requirement that sea otter fur be significantly altered before being sold to the general public.

Lest you think I am opposed to Alaska Native traditional art, I lived in the SE village of Hoonah for three years and have long supported Alaska Native issues. However, what I am hearing from some, is that this will be a real "money maker."

I view your proposal to change the definition as strictly political, short sighted, and non-scientific. Please do not facilitate more harvest on sea otters in Alaska by adopting a the less restrictive definition for "significantly altered" in response to the narrow market of shell fisheries without considering other more lucrative markets that benefit from sea otters, like tourism and kelp nurseries for fin fish, including salmon, rock fish and many more. Plus the kelp beds brought back by sea otters absorb huge amounts of CO2.

Do not follow Alaska's bad example implementing predator control without scientific justification. Please!

Thank you for taking time to consider my comments.

Sincerely,

Patricia O'Brien

The proposed language is ambiguous and dubitable.

The MMPA is not intended to deprive Alaska Native people of maintaining their traditional livelihood by means of hunting sea otter and utilizing the pelt in a traditional manner.

The USFWS language narrows the interpretations of the MMPA and the draft language is derived from agency objectives to further restrict sea otter harvest without regard to holistic ecosystem impacts caused by exponential population growth of sea otters.

The draft language further weakens the continuation of customary and traditional uses of sea otter. The proposed language does little to encourage and assist in every way possible the continuation and inclusion of present-day Native cultures and practices, and Native traditional activities.

These interpretations do little to foster the continuation of Alaska Native harvest and utilization of sea otter to insure that the traditional subsistence use of sea otters continues.

The USFWS should set aside budget funds to tribal organizations and MMPA commissions to conduct the population assessments, harvest estimates, and fund tribally developed cultural programs that support indigenous use of sea otter, especially for young people.

Alaska Natives from coastal areas have always supported themselves from the land and sea and have shared this cultural knowledge within their communities. With this sharing of knowledge comes a building of new knowledge and to confine "authentic Native articles of handicrafts and clothing" to a narrow interpretation of "significantly altered" further diminishes the sense of extended family and community that works to promote important Alaska Native values: generosity, respect for knowledge, and guidance of elders and self-esteem.

The language further relegates Alaska Native people to a state of dependency.

The scale of social-economic disparity that Alaska Native people experience leaves them unable to defend themselves against a government agency that is intent on using the weight of all its power to exercise a heavy hand of enforcement rather than to build self-reliance, self-determination and integrity of Native Cultures.

Thank you,

Patricia Phillips

Dear Sir,

Alaska Representative Donald Young has introduced a bill to restart the fur trade of northern sea otters. Bill (H.R. 2714), seeks To amend the Marine Mammal Protection Act of 1972 to allow the transport, purchase, and sale of pelts of, and handicrafts, garments, and art produced from, Southcentral and Southeast Alaska northern sea otters.

The International Union for Conservation of Nature still lists the sea otter as an endangered species, and describes the most significant threat to sea otters as oil pollution from, oil spills. The Exxon Valdez oil spill of 24 March 1989 killed thousands of sea otters and the lingering oil in the area continues to affect the population. All sea otters are protected under the Marine Mammal Protection Act which makes it illegal to hunt a sea otter or sell any products made from the body of a sea otter, unless the sea otter is harvested by an Alaskan Native for subsistence purposes.

The population growth of the Northern sea otter is near an all-time low and harvest rates have more than doubled in the last few years. With the ever looming threat of Alaska oil drilling, this is no time to even consider removing the sea otter from current protections.

I urge you to oppose changes to weaken current protections of Alaska's sea otters.

Sincerely,

Patricia (Belgium)

Reference: U.S. FWS Request for Public Comment on the "Draft Clarification of Select Terms Under the Marine Mammal Protection Act (MMPA) in Regard to Sea Otter

Dear Ms. Mann,

I am an Aleut and use marine mammals for subsistence purposes as afforded me under Section 101(b) of the Marine Mammal Protection Act (MMPA). The following are my comments on the U. S. Fish and Wildlife Services' (USFWS) proposed changes to the definitions for the terms; "dwells on the coast", "large-scale mass production", and "significantly altered".

First and foremost, I do not support the USFWS proposal to change the definitions of these terms for the following reasons:

(1) Congress passed Section 101(b) of the MMPA to protect the Alaska Native way of life and continued use of the marine mammal resources depended upon for subsistence purposes for nutrition, and making authentic Alaska Native clothing and handcrafts. It was not created with the intent that Alaska Natives become "wards" or "slaves" to the desires of the federal management agencies, in particular the USFWS. The "new" terminology proposed by the USFWS; (a) dictates where an Alaska Native is to "reside-- living permanently in an area or community" in order to harvest and use sea otter for subsistence purposes; (b) restricts and dictates the type of tools and machinery Alaska Natives can use to make clothing and handcrafts; and (c) further restricts and dictates the types of clothing and handcraft items that would be approved by federal management and enforcement personnel to be considered "significantly altered"

History has documented the times the Aleut people were "enslaved by the Russian Government to harvest sea otters for Russia. Then when Alaska was purchased by the United States, the Aleut People were again "enslaved" by the U.S. Government "to harvest and process fur seals for the U.S. Government. During these time of enslavement, Aleuts were told where they would live ("dwells on the coast"); when, where and how to harvest sea otter and fur seal and the methods to be used to process the marine mammal hides (significantly altered & large-scale mass production). The recent actions by the USFWS to redefine the terms, "dwells on the coast, large-scale mass production, and significantly altered" contained in USFWS federal regulation; suggests an underlying desire of the USFWS to again, "enslave" the Aleut, Indian and Eskimo (Alaska Native peoples) way of life by putting into place regulatory terms that "control", "restrict" and "dictate" the Alaska Natives subsistence use of sea otter. The Aleut culture suffered dramatically during the periods of "enslavement", and valued customs and traditions were lost. I do not support the new terminology proposed by the USFWS as it will impose unnecessary burdens upon the Alaska Native marine mammal subsistence users and the proposed restrictions will only serve to negatively impact our way of life.

(2) The Aleut meaning for the term "significantly altered" means, "the marine mammal (in this case, sea otter) has been killed and is no longer alive", IT IS DEAD! Making clothing and handicrafts from sea otter will not bring the mammal back to life, even if you recreate a replica of a sea otter from its hide, the replica can not breath, eat, sleep or reproduce as it is not a living animal. The hide or parts used for clothing and handicrafts are just parts from an already "significantly altered" (dead) marine mammal.

(3) The MMPA states "dwells on the coast of the Pacific Ocean and Arctic Ocean, it does not state that Alaska Natives must reside permanently within specific boundaries (for example, within 50 miles) or communities of the coast. In addition, it states, "authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing "means items composed wholly or in some significant respect of natural materials", it does not state "significantly altered" as this term has a totally different meaning altogether. In addition, it states "— produced, decorated, or fashioned in the exercise of traditional native handicrafts without the use of pantographs, multiple carvers, or other mass coping devices", it does not state "without the use of embroidery machines, cutting presses, stencils, transfers, stamps, and/or the use of assembly line production". Alaska Natives have historically used stencil, transfers, sewing machines and tools, which would be considered "modern" machinery to make traditional clothing and handicrafts prior to the passage of the MMPA. If Congress had intended that Alaska Natives could not use or were banned from the use of "embroidery machines, cutting presses, stencils, transfers, stamps, and/or the use of assembly lines production" these things would have been included in Section 101(b) when it was passed by Congress into law.

It appears the drafters of the new terminology do not have any in-depth experience, knowledge or understanding of the Alaska Native way of life, the culture or traditions, nor do they have a basic understanding, experience, or skills in sewing clothing or creating handicrafts from sea otters. Otherwise, the drafter would not have seen a need for "clarification" of the terms. The "new" definitions do not support the intent of the MMPA and if the USFWS "moves forward" with the approval of the "new" definitions, they would only serve to create more confusion and misinterpretation by Alaska Natives, federal agency management and enforcement personnel, and the public.

(3) The intent of Section 101(b) was put into place to protect the Alaska Native way of life, not to further restrict them from pursuing their cultural and traditional subsistence use of marine mammals, including sea otter. The MMPA was not passed into law to become a tool for the USFWS to use to "enslave" and place unreasonable hardship or burdens upon the Alaska Native people. The "new" language proposed by the USFWS if adopted would only serve to provide the USFWS with the means to usurp and undermine the intent of Section 101(b) of the MMPA; and to create addition provisions to further criminalize some of the tools and methods currently used by the Alaska Natives to harvest and make clothing and handicrafts from sea otter. Therefore, as an Aleut marine mammal subsistence user, I STRONGLY OPPOSE the approval of the "new" language for the terms; "dwells on the coast, large-scale mass production, significantly altered", proposed by the USFWS.

In closing, the proposed clarification language contains key elements to again "enslave" the Alaska Natives cultural and traditional subsistence use of marine mammals. The "new" definitions do not serve to "clarify" Section 101(b), but instead creates more confusion and ground for more mis-interpretation by the FWS management and enforcement personnel. The terms continue to undermine the intent of Congress and the MMPA, putting into place unnecessary and unreasonable restrictions that prohibit the use of and criminalize tools and methods currently used for making authentic Alaska Native clothing and handcrafts. In addition, the process being used by the USFWS to "move forward" in adopting the "newly" defined terms does not appear to follow the federal governments rulemaking process, which brings in into question the integrity and ability of the USFWS to follow the "federal laws" the agency is required to abide by in rulemaking. These actions also affect the public trust in the agency itself.

Sincerely,

Peggy N. Osterback,

Dear US Fish and Wildlife Service,
Thank you for taking my public comment.

My name is Peter Williams I am a marine mammal hunter and skin sewer and a former tanner. I own and operate a micro business that specializes in making and selling sea otter fur garments and crafts. As a subsistence user, business man, advocate for continuing Alaska Native traditions and customs I value following laws and regulations out of respect for: the resources I am utilizing, others who also value those resources and those who are regulating the use of such resources. However in order for me to follow laws and regulations they need to be clear and understandable. I appreciate that US Fish and Wildlife Service recognizes this and is attempting to clarify the way they are regulating the Marine Mammal Protection Act however this latest attempt leaves me with more questions than answers.

1. Dwells on the Coast. The way it is written does not recognize that Traditional Alaska Natives were people who traveled and migrated hundreds and thousands of miles to hunt and trade for marine mammals. Including those who spent most of their time inland but would historically travel to the coast for marine mammals. It also does not recognize that Alaska Natives travel and move for school, work, personal and family reasons both within and out of the State of Alaska while remaining in the United States. The inherent right for all Alaska Natives to hunt and work with marine mammals should be recognized - it currently is not.

2. Large-scale Mass Production. In trying to clarify this USFWS says "However, there can be no manufacturing on a large-scale by means of extensive mechanization or division of labor, such as using a standardized pattern on a large-scale." Basically USFWS in trying to clarify large-scale is saying large-scale means large-scale. This does not clarify what large scale-scale means. And brings further questions up such as what is "a standardized pattern"? FWS is also contradicting what it states earlier which is "The formation of traditional Native groups or cooperatives and the use of modern implements such as sewing machines are permitted." For traditional Native groups and cooperatives are clearly a division of labor and work forces. USFWS needs to clarify Large-scale Mass Production and not use contradictions in doing so.

3. Significantly Altered From Their Natural Form. This is one of the most capricious regulations in existences. It also has nothing to do with art and craft which is what is defined as a Alaska Native Handicraft in the exemption. USFWS needs to recognize the definition of a Native Handicraft as defined by the US Congress and written into law and stop confusing law abiding citizens with a definition no one can understand. Further more the statement of arts and crafts needing to have a lining or backing is absurd and does not recognize traditional Alaska Native arts and crafted that do not have linings or backings.

Thank you for your time and understanding,
All the best,

Peter Williams

Comments to USFWS
Draft Clarification of Select Terms
Under the MMPA in regards to sea otters

In the statement 1) Dwells on the Coast – refers to residing in Alaska and living permanently in an area or community that is adjacent to waters that are tidally influenced or in an area commonly inhabited and used by marine mammals.

My response is: The southwestern stock of sea otters boundaries are shifting with today's environmental climate changes and food sources. The term that I heard being used to describe the presence of sea otter's in Port Heiden is a place refuge. I consider that there is a significant amount of residency of sea otters (Enhydra lutris kenyoni) in Port Heiden notably since about the early 1990s according to local residents. The most noted a phenomenon of sea otter behavior is the die off on land that is observed in Port Heiden. In the early 1990s as said by Gerda Kosbruk the local resident at the time Orville Lind found a sea otter carcass near Caribou Cabin about 3 miles from the epicenter of the village towards the Aniakchak Volcano.

Then in the year 2000 as Gerda again describes as the worst year observed in weather for Port Heiden where everything died off and again sea otters were observed dead on land around the village. In 2007 Gerda actually sent in a few photographs that made the local newspaper with her children with a harvest sea otter carcass. In 2012 was the most sea otter carcasses observed in Port Heiden one family harvested about 14-tagged sea otters. The otters were seen: near the school, near the local store, on the roadsides coming up from the Old Village of Meshik which is our water front to Meshik Bay, and near the beaches, on the ice and in the tundra, and some were half eaten at or picked at, or frozen to the ground and ice. Annie Christensen also commented that in these cases where the sea otters are found on land it depends on the kind of winter we have, like the ice conditions in the bay and drifted ice sheets causing a land lock to their adopted home in Meshik Bay.

I understand that yes the sea otter dwells in a marine ecosystem near open seawater with relatively close feeding sites and nearby areas of protection for haul outs from predation and for rest and safe locations especially for pupping. Predation to sea otters here include: killer whales, scavengers once on land by: crows, eagles and foxes and humans. When the harsh weather conditions where ice over in the Bay do not provide a feeding and protective habitat by blocked sea ice so they seek solace on the landlocked terrain in order to cross over the other side (the Pacific side). This behavior by the sea otter has been noted in harbor seal surveys and sea otter surveys done by The Native Village of Port Heiden and the Bristol Bay Native Association and The Alaska Sea otter and Steller sea lion Commission who both respectfully help to fund each project. The otters are noted as looking sickly and skinny, some of the carcass fur conditions are mangled from scavengers or being physically frozen and decay to the ground surface and iced areas.

In the statement 2) Large-scale Mass Production – Large-scale mass production refers to the use of mass copying devices such as pantographs, multiple carvers, embroidery machines, cutting presses, stencils, transfers, stamps, and/or the use of assembly line production. The formation of traditional Native groups or cooperatives and the use of modern implements such as sewing machines are permitted. However, there can be no manufacturing on a large-scale by means of extensive mechanization or division of labor, such as using a standardized pattern on a large-scale.

My response is: The take home message is not to mass produce in any way for the use of sea otter handicrafts and clothing like for retail and wholesale as an item. Annie Christensen says that making items with sea otter pelt should only be done by hand for sewing and handling or worked by hand from the local Alaska native people. The way we tan today adds value to its hide and we want to keep being able to send the hide to a tannery says Annie. John Christensen a local sea otter hunter was told that brain matter was used to cure the tanning process of hides because of the acidity in the brain. He agrees that using an accredited tannery should still be allowed. I agree that mass production and capitalizing off sea otter crafts and clothing should not be allowed, but I do want to see the added protection to hunters and artist who responsibly and professional handle the sea otter for ways to educate and add value to traditional practices for future generations.

- a. In order to be considered significantly altered from its natural form, a tanned, dried, cured, or preserved part of a sea otter hide, devoid only of the head, feet, and tail (i.e., blocked), or any other remaining parts of the hide, must be substantially changed through means including, but not limited to: weaving, carving, stitching, sewing, lacing, beading, drawing, painting, or other handcrafting methods. Examples of significantly altered items include those items typically known as: mittens, hats, neck rolls; gloves; mukluks; purses; and blankets or scarves made from a hide or pieces of hide with a backing or lining and stitched around the edges.
- b. Items will not be considered significantly altered from their natural form where merely minimal changes have been made to a hide devoid only of the head, feet, and tail (i.e., blocked), and where those items can be easily converted back to an unaltered piece of hide. Examples of items not considered to be significantly altered include: a cape that consists of a large hide with a single button neck closure; a hide that has been drawn on with a marker; a blanket with a few stitches.

My response is: The significantly altered definition is good. We (other input from the office of The Native Village of Port Heiden) get the message that we cannot sell a raw hide or tanned hide in the original state it shall not be profitable as a sale. A question posed is what about native to native can I obtain a hide and give it to another native to use for their expert handcraft that they in turn sell or gift to other members of their family? We are under the impression that you can and we want to keep it that way.

RE: Draft Clarification of Select Terms Under the Marine Mammal Protection Act in Regard To Sea Otters

The Petersburg Vessel Owners Association (PVOA) is a diverse group of over 100 commercial fishermen and businesses operating primarily in Southeast Alaska. Our members provide millions of meals to the public annually by participating in a variety of fisheries statewide including salmon, herring, halibut, cod, crab, black cod, shrimp, and dive fisheries. PVOA appreciates the opportunity to comment on the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service (FWS) clarification of three terms used in the Marine Mammal Protection Act (MMPA).

Although PVOA does not believe that the proposed terminology clarifications actually address the primary issue of concern, that being the rapid and uncontrolled expansion of the sea otter populations in Southeast Alaska, we support regulation changes that clarify terminology. However, nowhere in the language of the MMPA is the term “significantly altered” used as promulgated in the regulations. That particular term seems to have been often used to the disadvantage and detriment of Southeast Alaska Natives. The logical solution to the problem is to re-write the regulations by deleting reference to “significantly altered” and to align the regulations with the legislation by adopting the following MMPA language “Traditional native handicrafts include, but are not limited to weaving, carving, stitching, sewing, lacing, beading, drawing and painting.” This would simplify enforcement as it would enable immediate identification of any of the methods used in the manufacture of the handicrafts. The job of FWS should not be to restrict the allowable uses to protect sea otters, but to provide opportunities for Alaskan Natives to produce authentic native handicrafts and clothing for use in commerce and to participate in traditional cultural practices.

Absent FWS’s adoption of our suggesting language, we do support the proposed changes. Hopefully, these clarifications will alleviate some of the disincentives and confusions faced by Alaska Natives who have wanted to, but were unwilling to take sea otters for fear of doing something wrong and being faced with enforcement and legal actions against them.

PVOA's support of any proposed select clarifications in regard to sea otters in no way should be interpreted as support of the current FWS sea otter management. Over the past nineteen years, FWS has failed to meet virtually any of its objectives stated in the 1994 FWS document, Conservation Plan For The Sea Otter In Alaska. Of particular concern is the lack of progress to attain Objective 1: Identify the optimal sustainable population range of sea otters including those factors which may influence how such a range is defined. While the FWS acknowledges in the "Background" portion of the Request for Public Comments on the Select Terms, that the sea otter population is actively expanding into unoccupied habitat and that they are "working to determine its optimum sustainable populations and carrying capacity of the habitat for this species" the failure to attain Objective 1 and establish these two population parameters over the past nineteen years has prevented the development of a biologically based management plan to manage the dramatically increasing population of sea otters in Southeast Alaska. Only recently has any sort of even minimal (and woefully inadequate) actual effort has been undertaken to determine sea otter sustainability or habitat carrying capacity.

FWS's failure to implement any active and proper management, has allowed the sea otter population in Southeast Alaska to grow at the alarming rate of 12 to 14 percent per year and to attain the current abundance, as estimated by FWS, to be 25,000 individuals and expanding to 50,000 individuals over the next 5-6 years. This drastic increase in sea otters is threatening the populations of many shellfish and other invertebrate species to a point where subsistence, sport and commercial fishing has been stopped or significantly reduced in many areas due to low abundance. The residents of virtually all communities throughout Southeast Alaska rely on shellfish not only for their livelihood, but for the survival of a subsistence way of live. The loss of commercial harvests has resulted in negative economic impacts on the seafood industry and seafood dependent communities have experienced a loss in employment, wages and associated economic activities. The loss of economic opportunity in this case is not an abstract concept, it is very real and needs to be addressed, not as a Grand Experiment or academic exercise, but as an actual threat to the economic viability of coastal Alaska communities.

Thank you for this opportunity to comment on the proposed changes to the MMPA and other issues. If we can provide further information or answer any questions pertaining to these matters, please feel free to contact us.

RE: Request for public comments on the "Draft Clarification of Select Terms Under the Marine Mammal Protection Act (MMPA) in Regards to Sea Otter.

Dear Ms. Mann,

The Qagan Tayagungin Tribe would like to comment on the Draft Clarification of Select Terms Under the Marine Mammal Protection Act (MMPA) in Regards to Sea Otter. The Qagan Tayagungin feels the proposed changes would negatively affect Aleut marine mammal subsistence hunters and handcrafters, as well as all Alaska Native subsistence and handcrafters throughout the State of Alaska.

In regards to the proposed clarification in the term "dwells on the coast", the Tribe has some concerns. The Act states "dwells on the coast of the North Pacific Ocean or the Arctic Ocean", though does not currently state permanent residency as a requirement. The tribe's concern is how "living permanently" will be determined and enforced by FWS law enforcement?

Will FWS have maps available for Alaska Tribes and Native subsistence hunters and users outlining the approved areas described as "adjacent to waters that are tidally influenced", "commonly inhabited", or "used by marine mammals"? What are tidally influenced areas, and do they include major river systems marine mammals are known to inhabit from time to time?

The Qagan Tayagungin Tribe feels the new definitions being proposed by the FWS concerning "dwells on the coast" placed additional restrictions not currently required by the MMPA, placing an unnecessary burden on the Qagan Tayagungin people, as well as other Indian, Aleut, and Eskimo marine mammal subsistence users.

In regards to "large-scale mass production", and the increased limitations placed on Alaska Natives forbidding the use of "other mass copying devices", the Qagan Tayagungin people and Alaska Native people as a whole have used patterns for thousands of years while creating clothing and handcraft. Why should our native people be criminalized for using patterns to create their traditional clothing and handicrafts simply because they utilize sea otters?

The Qagan Tayagungin Tribe is also concerned with the proposed language change requiring handicrafts to be "significantly altered". The current MMPA states authentic native articles of handcraft and clothing as follows: "means items composed wholly or in some significant respect of natural material". The MMPA act, approved by Congress, does not hold Native articles of handcraft or clothing to an arbitrary and vague stipulation of "significantly altered".

Why would the Service actively seek out feedback from the Native Community at the IPCoMM workshop in October of 2012, committing to having draft language reviewed by the FWS solicitors office and to provided to participants prior to going out for comment on the draft language; then turn around and seek comment on draft language which did NOT incorporate language developed by Alaska Native participants? By doing this, the Service has shown an immeasurable amount of disrespect to the individuals who attended this meeting in October, and the Tribes and entities they represented by not taking any of their input into consideration.

In summary, the Qagan Tayagungin Tribe has major concerns with the draft language the Service has put forth looking to modify the MMPA, and increase the methods in which our people, and Alaska Native people as a whole can be held criminally liable for creating traditional handicrafts and clothing. While current language is clear and straightforward, proposed draft language is substantially more restrictive, burdensome, confusing, and subject to misinterpretation. Furthermore, the proposed draft language does NOT support the intent of the MMPA to protect the Alaska Native subsistence way of life. The Qagan Tayagungin Tribe supports the stance of the Aleut Marine Mammal Commission whereas the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Services is mandated to uphold the laws, and not to re-write them.

In summary, the Qagan Tayagungin Tribe DOES NOT SUPPORT the proposed language to re-define terms "dwells on the coast", "large-scale mass production", and "significantly altered".

Sincerely,

David O. Osterback

To Whom It May Concern:

I would like to comment on the USFWS draft document: "Draft Clarification of the Application of Select Terms under the Marine Mammal Protection Act (MMPA) with Regard to Sea Otters."

I serve in the Alaska House of Representatives (District 34) which covers most of rural Southeast Alaska, including: Angoon, Craig, Elfin Cove, Haines, Hoonah, Hydaburg, Kake, Kasaan, Klawock, Klukwan, Metlakatla, Pelican, Port Alexander, and Sitka.

In Southeast Alaska the sea otter population has fully recovered to over 25,000 animals, and according to USFW, is increasing 12 to 14 percent each year. The shellfish population has declined drastically at the same time because sea otters consume shellfish at an alarming rate. According to the USFWS, there are 25,000 sea otters in Southeast Alaska. Using an average body weight of 65 lbs. and a daily food intake of 25% of body weight, a sea otter population of 25,000 animals will consume over 148 million pounds of shellfish per year. To put that into perspective, the entire 2012 Southeast Alaska harvest in the dive and dungeness crab fisheries was only 4.8 million pounds. The people in Southeast Alaska depend on shellfish as part of a subsistence lifestyle and in some cases, income to support their families.

I would like to comment on the clarification of the terms "significantly altered from their natural forum," "coastal dwelling" and "mass produced" as they apply to Alaska Native handicrafts and clothing made from sea otter parts under MMPA.

1. Significantly altered from their natural form: many traditional dance groups in Southeast Alaska use sea otter as trim around dance robes, hats, store-bought gloves, capes, etc. Today, much of the traditional regalia is not "natural" materials, but from materials—such as cotton, wool and buttons—bought in a store. Buttons have replaced traditional shells, and store bought materials are easily accessible. The USFWS is proposing that examples of items not considered to be significantly altered include a "cape that consists of a large hide with a single button neck closure." I have seen many beautiful sea otter robes and capes at gatherings in Southeast Alaska. Sometimes they may have a simple clasp to hold the robe or cape in place, or that might have limited stitching. What is "limited stitching?" Why should the USFWS mandate that a pelt must have lining? Traditional blankets did not have backing. I don't believe we should dictate tradition to the Alaska Native people, whether traditional or contemporary. It appears that the definition of "significantly altered" has been used to entrap and cite Alaska Natives.

The Alaska Federation of Natives is the largest organization in Alaska. The delegates to the convention in 2012 unanimously passed resolution 12-10: Supporting the definition of significantly altered for the purposes of sea otter handicraft in the Marine Mammal Protection Act to prevent further overzealous law enforcement practices. The resolution states that the Indigenous People's Council for Marine Mammals (IPCMM) has identified the regulatory language of "significantly altered" used by the USFWS as vague and ambiguous. I suggest that there be an inclusive working group including all IPCMM and other Native organizations to develop an extensive list.

2. Coastal Dwelling. The definition provided refers to "residing in Alaska and living permanently in an area or community that is adjacent to waters that are tidally influenced or in an area commonly inhabited and used by marine mammals." The problem with this language is that many Alaska Native people move to larger communities for work (due to the high unemployment rate in rural Alaska) or to attend school. What is the purpose of this proposed language? Many Alaska Natives who have moved to a larger city still return to their coastal communities to subsistence hunt or get materials, such as sea otter, for Native regalia or art products.
3. Mass Production: I am supportive of a sustainable cottage industry in Southeast Alaska. Sealaska Heritage Institute has taken the lead on programs that used marine mammal products in programs that are sustainable, culture-based, and provide economic income to tribal members who live in areas that have high unemployment rates.

Thank you for the opportunity to provide comments on this very important issue.

Sincerely,

Representative Jonathan Kreiss-Tomkins

Dear Director Dan Ashe, U.S. Fish & Wildlife Service:

I urge you to stop efforts to manage fisheries through the use of predator control by loosening the restrictions of what constitutes "significantly altered". I believe your current suggested revision to the definition of "significantly altered" as to what can be done to a sea otter pelt for handicraft purposes is too ambiguous. It is too broad and at odds with the Marine Mammal Protection Act and is being conducted without any environmental impact analysis. I am concerned that it will be easy to turn sea otter pelts into blankets and rugs with little modification. It is too broad and at odds with the MMPA and is being conducted without any environmental impact analysis.

I am afraid the FWS proposal would open up the general market to the commercialization of sea otter fur into mass-produced items like blankets and rugs by circumventing the requirement that sea otter fur be significantly altered before being sold to the general public.

In addition, the analysis to determine the true population status of sea otters in Southeast Alaska is just getting underway and questions as to whether the population is at optimum sustainable population levels and whether this population could be listed as "depleted" under the MMPA have yet to be determined. Until such time, FWS should not be allowing any process that could direct more harvest on sea otters in Alaska.

Please do not put forth a definition for "significantly altered" that will be less restrictive of what is made from sea otter pelts and that would put added hunting pressure on sea otters in Southeast Alaska and possibly elsewhere in Alaska.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Richard Hoskins

Dear Sir,

Alaska Representative Donald Young has introduced a bill to restart the fur trade of northern sea otters. Bill (H.R. 2714), seeks To amend the Marine Mammal Protection Act of 1972 to allow the transport, purchase, and sale of pelts of, and handicrafts, garments, and art produced from, Southcentral and Southeast Alaska northern sea otters.

The International Union for Conservation of Nature still lists the sea otter as an endangered species, and describes the most significant threat to sea otters as oil pollution from, oil spills. The Exxon Valdez oil spill of 24 March 1989 killed thousands of sea otters and the lingering oil in the area continues to affect the population.

All sea otters are protected under the Marine Mammal Protection Act which makes it illegal to hunt a sea otter or sell any products made from the body of a sea otter, unless the sea otter is harvested by an Alaskan Native for subsistence purposes.

The population growth of the Northern sea otter is near an all-time low and harvest rates have more than doubled in the last few years. With the ever looming threat of Alaska oil drilling, this is no time to even consider removing the sea otter from current protections.

I urge you to oppose changes to weaken current protections of Alaska's sea otters.

Dear U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

As a biologist and avid outdoorsperson, I oppose changes to the Marine Mammal Protection Act that would expand the definition of "handicraft" to include nearly unaltered sea otter pelts. Any definition of handicraft should be narrow enough to ensure that sea otters are allowed to recover and thrive.

Though sea otter populations in some parts of Alaska appear to be increasing that recovery is and continues to be a slow one; and otter populations in southwest Alaska are still not recovering .... they've been listed as threatened under the Endangered Species Act.

Sea otters play an important role in Alaska's coastal ecosystems by encouraging the growth of kelp beds, which serve as nurseries for fish and create important carbon dioxide sinks. They need to be protected, not treated as predators to be eradicated.

Thank you.

RE: Definition of Significantly Altered

To Whom it May Concern,

Southeast Alaska Fishermen's Alliance (SEAFa) is a non-profit commercial fishing association representing our members involved in the salmon, crab, shrimp and longline fisheries of Southeast Alaska.

We have received a copy of the 2013 draft Guidance on Authentic Native Articles of Handicrafts and Clothing made from Sea Otters that you are taking comments on through today. SEAFa believes that this new draft is an improvement from the March 2012 draft but is still not consistent with the actual enabling legislation. The language in the Marine Mammal Protection Act (MMPA) Title 1 Section 101; Moratorium on taking and importing marine mammals and marine mammal products says, ". . . authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing" means items composed wholly or in some significant respect of natural materials, and which are produced, decorated, or fashioned in the exercise of traditional native handicrafts without the use of pantographs, multiple carvers, or other mass copying devices. Traditional native handicrafts include, but are not limited to weaving, carving, stitching, sewing, lacing, beading, drawing and painting; . . ." Nowhere does the language use "significantly altered" as promulgated in the regulations.

"Significantly altered" is a standard that is difficult to define and leaves interpretation up to individual enforcement officers that define it differently creating a gray area that hinders the creation of handicrafts for fear of prosecution? The proposed draft guidance contains a Note that the artistic value is not judged or interpreted, only the amount of change from the original pelt. This is completely against the intent of the exemption for Alaskan Natives to create and sell authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing in interstate commerce.

The solution to this issue is to redo the regulations, deleting the reference to significantly altered and moving back into alignment with the legislation, "Traditional native handicrafts include, but are not limited to weaving, carving, stitching, sewing, lacing, beading, drawing and painting." Enforcement would be simple, as it is quickly identifiable that one of the mediums listed were used in the final product. It is not the job of the agency to try and restrict the allowable uses to protect the sea otters but to allow the Alaskan Natives an opportunity to engage in commerce producing authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing to facilitate their independence while participating in a traditional cultural practice.

We also object to a portion of your definition of "Large-scale Mass Production". The last sentence states that using a standardized pattern on a large scale would be considered mass production but take for example a pair of mittens - that pattern is pretty standardized and you are going to use the pattern over and over again which would be illegal under this definition.

Sincerely,

RE: Request for Public Comments on Select Terms Under the Marine Mammal Protection Act in Regards to Sea Otters.

Dear Sirs,

The Southeast Alaska Regional Dive Fisheries Association (SARDFFA) was formed in 1998 under Alaska statutes 43.76.150-210. SARDFFA works cooperatively with ADF&G in developing its Annual Operating Plan, which determines how the dive assessments (self-imposed tax on the dive resources) will be spent.

SARDFFA is an innovative approach to biologically and economically sustainable development of natural resources which partners industry, government and communities for the most effective and efficient use of resources. SARDFFA's mission is to develop, expand, and enhance new and existing dive fisheries in Southeast Alaska. The Alaska Department's of Fish and Game miscellaneous shellfish program is supported by the assessments on the dive resources (7% on sea urchins, and 5% on both sea cucumbers and geoduck). In recent years the annual ex-vessel value of our fisheries has been approximately 8 to 15 million dollars.

SARDFFA has been working closely with the United States Fish and Wildlife Service, the Alaska Department of Fish and Game, and the University of Alaska over the past several years to determine the impact of sea otters to the various shellfish resources in Southeast Alaska. SARDFFA has been instrumental in forming a working group to look at sea otter impacts and to formulate potential management plans to slow down or mitigate the sea otter's impacts. This working group includes subsistence and Tribal interests, municipalities, State and Federal government, and commercial harvesters.

The return of sea otters from near extinction, and the re-occupation of most of their historic range is a conservation success story. Today, the estimated sea otter population in Southeast Alaska is 27,500 animals. However, the species' recovery has not come without controversy. The conflict between sea otters and humans over shellfish resources is the most serious problem that has arisen. With healthy populations of sea otters firmly established in most of their historic range in coastal Alaska, now is an appropriate juncture to examine existing and potential management problems and resource conflicts, and consider real time solutions to those management problems and conflicts.

These marine mammals consume shellfish at a rate of approximately 25% of their body weight (average of 65 lbs) each day, equating to an average annual shellfish harvest of 150 million pounds. By comparison, the annual commercial shellfish harvest in Southeast Alaska was less than 5 million pounds in 2012. Projecting this growth out to the year 2018, the sea otter population will be approximately 50,000 and the annual shellfish harvest by sea otters will be approximately 300 million pounds. At that time the commercial and subsistence shellfish harvest will no longer exist.

One of the first of the shellfish populations to fall prey to the sea otter's appetite was the pinto abalone on the outer coast of Southeast Alaska. The pinto abalone in Southeast Alaska is now virtually gone. ADF&G has documented a severe decline in the population of sea urchins, sea cucumbers, geoduck clams, and Dungeness crab in areas populated by sea otters. The Alaska Department of Fish and Game has closed sea cucumber and sea urchin areas to commercial harvest due to the predation by sea otters and has reduced the harvest of the geoduck clam fishery in several areas. It is guaranteed that more areas will be closed in upcoming years. More and more Dungeness crab fishing grounds are now barren of crab, not from a well managed commercial fishery, but from the ever increasing population of sea otters. The annual ex-value of commercially harvested Dungeness crab in Southeast Alaska in recent years is between 5 to 11 million dollars.

The ability of Alaskans to harvest Dungeness crab, sea cucumbers, abalone, and clams for subsistence, sport, and personal use is being negatively impacted by sea otters. Information from towns and villages such as Kake, Hoonah, Sitka, Craig, Hydaburg and Klawock, indicate that sea otters have severely impacted shellfish in the vicinity of those towns.

SARDFa along with other organizations and municipalities in Southeast Alaska such as the Southeast Conference, the Juneau Economic Development Council, Petersburg Vessels Owners Association, Southeast Alaska Fishermen's Alliance, United Fishermen of Alaska, the city of Coffman Cove, the Prince of Wales Island Community Advisory Council, the city of Craig, the Ketchikan Gateway Borough, the city of Petersburg and various native organizations are all on record to establish a sea otter management plan which takes into account the total ecosystem and use of all shellfish species in Southeast Alaska.

We have received a copy of the Request for Public Comments on Select Terms Under the Marine Mammal Protection Act in Regard to Sea Otters that you are taking comments on through May 17, 2013. SARDFa believes that this new draft guidance does very little to increase the ability of Alaskan coastal natives to increase their harvest of sea otters.

The MMPA reads:

"(2) is done for purposes of creating and selling authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing: Provided, That only authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing may be sold in interstate commerce: And provided further, That any edible portion of marine mammals may be sold in native villages and towns in Alaska or for native consumption. For the purposes of this subsection, the term "authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing" means items composed wholly or in some significant respect of natural materials, and which are produced, decorated, or fashioned in the exercise of traditional native handicrafts without the use of pantographs, multiple carvers, or other mass copying devices. Traditional native handicrafts include, but are not limited to weaving, carving, stitching, sewing, lacing, beading, drawing and painting;

Nowhere does the language use "significantly altered" as promulgated in the regulations. In our experience the term "significantly altered" has been used to the detriment of SE AK natives.

The solution to this issue is to redo the regulations, deleting the reference to significantly altered and moving back into alignment with the legislation, "Traditional native handicrafts include, but are not limited to weaving, carving, stitching, sewing, lacing, beading, drawing and painting." Enforcement would be simple, as it is quickly identifiable that one of the mediums listed were used in the final product. It is not the job of the agency to try and restrict the allowable uses to protect the sea otters but to allow the Alaskan Natives an opportunity to engage in commerce producing authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing to facilitate their independence while participating in a traditional cultural practice.

USFWS is on record as stating that the harvest of sea otters in Southeast Alaska could be as many as 2,500 animals without harming the existing population of 27,500 sea otters. Presently 400 to 800 are harvested on an annual basis. We encourage USFWS to work with Tribal interests to substantially increase the present level of harvest.

SARDFA requests the USFWS acknowledge the impact of sea otters on the commercial, subsistence, and personal use of sea cucumber, sea urchin, geoduck clam and Dungeness crab, with the ultimate goal of an ecosystem-based sea otter management plan benefiting all users of these resources and protecting the resources from depletion.

Reference: USFWS Request for Public Comments on the “Draft Clarification of Select Terms Under the Marine Mammal Protection Act (MMPA) in Regard to Sea Otter”

Dear Ms. Mann,

Please accept the following comments in response to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service request for public comments on the “Draft Clarification of Select Terms Under the Marine Mammal Protection Act (MMPA) in Regard to Sea Otter.”

Sealaska is a federally-recognized tribe for special statutory purposes. Public Law 108-199, Div. H, § 161, Jan. 23, 2004, 118 Stat. 452, as amended Public Law 108-447, Div. H, Title V, § 518, Dec. 8, 2004, 118 Stat. 3267, provided that:

“The Director of the Office of Management and Budget and all Federal agencies shall hereafter consult with Alaska Native corporations on the same basis as Indian tribes under Executive Order No. 13175....”

Sealaska represents over 22,000 Alaska Native Tribal Member Shareholders, who along with other Alaska Natives, are the main beneficiaries of what is commonly referred to as the “Alaska Native exemption” within the Marine Mammal Protection Act.

As an Alaska Native Corporation whose membership is expressly impacted by the proposed changes; whose Native way of life is affected by these definitions; and whose culture may be irrevocably altered as a result of these definitions, we respectfully request your consideration of our concerns.

Congress recognized Alaska Native’s special relationship with marine mammals, in this case the sea otter, and included provisions exempting Alaska Natives from the harvest moratorium of the MMPA. Senator Stevens elaborated on this relationship by stating:

“For these people, ocean mammals provide not only food and clothing, but also, through the sale of meat, seal oil, handicrafts and clothing, the only available

source of money income with which they may purchase a few of the basic human needs taken for granted by everyone else in America.”

No other organization, group, or NGO can claim a more important or direct reliance upon marine mammals and the need for their continued existence than the Alaska Native people who depend upon them for their basic livelihood. Alaska Native people were able to maintain sustainable sea otter populations for thousands of years prior to the over exploitation of them by non-Natives. For these reasons, we believe the following comments should be afforded significant weight.

May we first emphatically state that Sealaska supports scientific studies of population levels to ensure a sustainable population and harvests. The harvest of marine mammals contributes to our cultural sustainability through the use of marine mammal products for traditional purposes and the sale of handicrafts.

The term “significantly altered” is vague and is subject to varying interpretations. This lack of clarity has led to varied and inconsistent enforcement practices, which in turn has created significant apprehension in the Native community and has stifled hunting and the use of sea otter for handicraft thereby causing hardships for many Native families and communities. While some NGO’s may support this approach as a way to reduce or prevent harvests, the consequence has led to expanding sea otter populations and impacts on commercial shellfish as well as subsistence resources.

The MMPA states:

“ Except as provided in section 1379 of this title, the provisions of this chapter shall not apply with respect to the taking of any marine mammal by any Indian, Aleut, or Eskimo who resides in Alaska and who dwells on the coast of the North Pacific Ocean or the Arctic Ocean if such taking –

(1) is for subsistence purposes; or

(2) is done for purposes of creating and selling authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing: Provided, That only authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing may be sold in interstate commerce: And provided further, That any edible portion of marine mammals may be sold in native villages and towns in Alaska or for native consumption. For the purposes of this subsection, the term “authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing” means items composed wholly or in some significant respect of natural materials, and which are produced, decorated, or fashioned in the exercise of traditional native handicrafts without the use of pantographs, multiple carvers, or other mass copying devices. Traditional native handicrafts include, but are not limited to weaving, carving, stitching, sewing, lacing, beading, drawing and painting.

Our affiliate, Sealaska Heritage Institute (SHI), implements many programs that incorporate marine mammal products and works to support a cottage industry that is sustainable and culturally relevant, and provides economic opportunities to our shareholders. The law is very clear as to what Native handicrafts include and even goes one step further to state “but not limited to.” For this reason, Sealaska Heritage Institute submitted a response on March 30, 2012 opposing the USFWS draft issued at that time regarding “significantly altered.” In this response, SHI asserted that inclusion of the language “significantly altered” was in effect an attempt to legislate rather than regulate. Our position on this has not changed; however, we feel that if the USFWS is going to legislate through regulations, surely they can support a definition developed and approved by the Native community.

In August of 2012, USFWS Director Dan Ashe visited Southeast Alaska and made a commitment to work with Alaska Native hunters and skin sewers to come up with a definition that was amenable. The USFWS then reached out to the Indigenous Peoples Commission on Marine Mammals (IPCOMM) to coordinate an event where handicrafters, artists, and hunters could gather and develop a definition alongside USFWS as “co-managers” of the marine mammals. SHI agreed that if the USFWS was not going to remove the significantly altered language altogether, that working with a group of Native artists and hunters to develop an acceptable definition was amenable. On October 10-12, 2013, IPCOMM, in conjunction with the USFWS, hosted over 30 Alaska Native individuals and came up with the following definition that is clear, concise, and agreeable to all participants:

A sea otter will be considered “significantly altered” when it is no longer recognizable as a whole sea otter hide and has been made into a handicraft or article of clothing as is identified below:

1. a tanned, dried, cured, or preserved sea otter hide, devoid of the head, feet, and tail, which includes any of the following but is not limited to weaving, carving, stitching, sewing, lacing, beading, drawing, painting, other decorative fashions, or made into another material or medium;
2. tanned, dried, cured, or preserved sea otter head, tail, or feet, or other parts devoid of the remainder of the hide which includes any of the following but is not limited to weaving, carving, stitching, sewing, lacing, beading, drawing, or painting, other decorative fashions, or made into another material or medium.

With this clarity, the aforementioned language was presented in a draft Resolution to the Alaska Federation of Natives (AFN) Board of Directors, which unanimously approved it for presentation to the full AFN Convention with a recommendation of “DO PASS.” Each of the regional caucuses met and supported the draft resolution, and the resolution was adopted by unanimous consent by the 4,000+ delegates to the 2012 AFN Convention on October 19, 2012. A copy of this resolution was provided to the USFWS.

It was also conveyed to the members of the IPCOMM working group that the Solicitor would review the language, and if there were substantial changes, the language would be brought back to the group. There were substantial changes, and those changes were not brought back to the working group. This is unfortunate and further erodes the trust in the process that so many hunters and handicrafters spent precious time investing in. To highlight the changes, newly added text is underlined below:

In March of 2013, the USFWS proposed the following definition for “Significantly Altered From Their Natural Form”-

a. In order to be considered significantly altered from its natural form, a tanned, dried, cured, or preserved part of a sea otter hide, devoid only of the head, feet, and tail (i.e., blocked), or any other remaining parts of the hide, must be substantially changed through means including, but not limited to: weaving, carving, stitching, sewing, lacing, beading, drawing, painting, or other handicrafting methods. Examples of significantly altered items include those items typically known as: mitten; hats; neck rolls; gloves; mukluks; purses; and blankets or scarves made from a hide or pieces of hide with a backing or lining and stitched around the edges.

b. Items will not be considered significantly altered from their natural form where merely minimal changes have been made to a hide devoid only of the head, feet, and tail (i.e., blocked), and where those items can be easily converted back to an unaltered piece of hide. Examples of items not considered to be significantly altered include: a cape that consists of a large hide with a single button neck closure; a hide that has been drawn on with a marker; a blanket with a few stitches.

The stark difference between these two definitions is apparent. The current direction seems to be focused around creating definitions intended to ensure that Alaska Natives cannot make handicrafts which may be purchased by non-Natives, repurposed, and then resold. Or further, to develop a small list of “acceptable items” that confine our culture to a certain time period, limit or relegate artistic abilities, and intentionally or unintentionally suppress artistic expressions. We believe this is contrary with the intent of the MMPA exemption.

Conversely, if for some reason a list of acceptable items is developed, we would request that the IPCOMM working group be reconvened to develop that list which would be adopted and approved in its entirety. Additionally, we request that the following process be adopted for handicrafts created that may not match those items on “the list”:

- 1.) An individual within the USFWS reviews photos of items within 2 weeks and provides a yes or no answer as to whether it can be sold.
- 2.) Should an item be rejected as not meeting the standards, an appeal could be filed with IPCOMM, and IPCOMM would review and provide a final decision that the USFWS would uphold. This co-management approach would provide input from the USFWS and the Native community, demonstrating that the USFWS values Alaska Native traditions and cultures.

Rather than focus definitions of “significantly altered” on trying to prohibit a form of handicraft that the USFWS deems undesirable, we would suggest the regulations, and subsequent enforcement, be shifted to those consumers who are purchasing handicrafts with the expressed intent to repurpose it into different items for resale. Surely, between the USFWS, Alaska Native artisans, and other NGOs, this could be very effective and far less bureaucratic. This model works well with other marine mammal products, such as seal and baleen.

What is the difference if an individual wants to purchase a handicraft containing a large piece of sea otter or several smaller pieces of sea otter so long as they are not doing so with the expressed purpose of re-making items for resale? Taking a stance whereby the enforcement is on the dishonest consumer relieves the USFWS from becoming one that judges art and handicrafts, to one that allows artists to be creative, expressive, and continue to contribute to the Alaska Native culture in traditional and contemporary ways. After all, culture is not just in the past, it is living and breathing today, tomorrow and in perpetuity.

Congress clearly understood this potential impact on the culture, both in the past and in the future, by stating “...our Nation is morally bound to respect the traditions and lifestyles of these people...[and that] by stripping these rights from them, they will face the certain fate of cultural extinction.” To erode the definition of handicraft (an art or craft made by hand) by limiting the quality, design, and form of those handicrafts, negatively impacts the culture. Furthermore, it stymies the creativity that led to Alaska Native Art being world renowned and relegates handicrafts to a governmental prescription rather than a distinct cultural art form.

The following definition for “Dwells on the Coast” was also proposed by the USFWS on March 1, 2013:

“Dwells on the Coast refers to residing in Alaska and living permanently in an area or community that is adjacent to waters that are tidally influenced or in an area commonly inhabited and used by marine mammals.”

Our concerns are as follows:

1. The MMPA states “dwells on the coast of the North Pacific Ocean or the Arctic Ocean.” The MMPA does not state “reside permanently” on the coast. What is the intent and purpose behind the USFWS’s “new” terms to require an Indian, Aleut, Eskimo, to “reside permanently” in an area that is “tidally influenced” and “commonly inhabited and used by marine mammals”?
2. How will “living permanently” be determined by USFWS law enforcement?
3. Will the USFWS have maps available for the Alaska Tribes and the Alaska Native subsistence hunters and users that outline the approved areas described as “adjacent to waters that are tidally influenced” or “areas commonly inhabited” or “used by marine mammals”?
4. What are “tidally influenced areas” and do they include major river systems that marine mammals are known to inhabit from time to time?
5. The “new” definition proposed by the USFWS for “dwells on the coast” re-defines the language contained in the MMPA and places additional restrictions not required by the MMPA, in addition to placing an unnecessary burden on the Indian, Aleut, Eskimo marine mammal subsistence users.
6. The U.S Constitution authorizes Congress to enact federal law. Which federal law authorizes the USFWS to re-define the terms contained in the MMPA and to enforce those “new” terms and restrictions upon Alaska Natives?

The following definition for “Large-scale Mass Production” was also proposed by the USFWS on March 1, 2013:

“Large-scale mass production refers to the use of mass copying devices such as pantographs, multiple carvers, embroidery machines, cutting presses, stencils, transfers, stamps, and/or the use of assembly line production. The formation of traditional Native groups or cooperatives and the use of modern implements such as sewing machines are permitted. However, there can be no manufacturing on a large-scale by means of extensive mechanization or division of labor, such as using a standardized pattern on a large-scale.”

The original language of Section 101(b) states: “is done for purposes of creating and selling authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing: Provided, That only authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing may be sold in interstate commerce: And provided further, That any edible portion of marine mammals may be sold in native villages and towns in Alaska or for native consumption. For the purposes of this subsection, the term “authentic native articles of handicrafts and clothing” means items composed wholly or in some significant respect of natural materials, and which are produced, decorated, or fashioned in the exercise of traditional native handicrafts without the use of pantographs, multiple carvers, or other mass copying devices. Traditional native handicrafts include, but are not limited to weaving, carving, stitching, sewing, lacing, beading, drawing and painting;”

Our Concerns are as follows:

1. The prohibition of “division of labor” would criminalize the involvement of family members in making items. It is very common for a mother to sew a hat together and a child to add the lining; however, this “division of labor” would make that illegal. The USFWS should clarify that “division of labor” would exclude family and only apply to wage-based positions.
2. The MMPA states “without the use of pantographs, multiple carvers, or other mass copying devices”; the language of the MMPA does not state the use of “embroidery machines, cutting presses, stencils, transfers, stamps, and or the use of assembly line production”. The pantographs, multiple carvers or other mass copying devices relate to ivory carvers, not skin sewers. Alaska Natives have historically used patterns (stencils, transfers) for thousands of years in creating their traditional and customary clothing and handicrafts. Like other sewers who make clothing (shirts, vests, pants, coats, etc.) from fabric (cotton, linen, wool, polyester, etc.) or leather (cow, pig, sheep, deer, moose hides), the use of patterns helps to utilize the hide in an efficient manner and helps eliminate waste of the materials used in the construction of clothing. The USFWS’s proposal to re-define the term “large-scale, mass production” is discriminatory in the sense that non-Natives are allowed to use these same tools (stencils, transfers) for creating clothing, whereas the Alaska Natives will be criminalized for utilizing the same tools for creating and making authentic Alaska Native clothing and handicrafts from sea otters.
3. The MMPA clearly describes what is considered large-scale mass production. The new definition proposed by the USFWS continues to usurp the intent of the MMPA to allow and protect the Alaska Native way of life and their ability to continue their traditional and customary practices in creating authentic Alaska Native clothing and handicrafts, and places additional restrictions and burdens upon the subsistence hunters and users not intended by the MMPA.
4. What has prompted the USFWS to make the determination, as described in the new definition language, that Alaska Natives cannot utilize an “embroidery machine” in making clothing or handicraft items? An “embroidery machine” is basically a “sewing” machine, which is allowed under Section 101(b) of the MMPA (see ‘sewing’). The USFWS may want to take into consideration that newer model sewing machines also have the capacity to do embroidery stitching. If an Alaska Native were to use one of the newer model sewing machines, would they then be breaking the law and subject to enforcement measures?

5. Which federal law authorizes and gives the USFWS the ability to pick and choose which “sewing” machinery can or cannot be used by Alaska Natives in the construction of clothing or handicrafts? What is the selection criteria and process for making this determination? Where can a person find this information?

In summation, the USFWS stated in the notice for public comment that the definitions were “to reduce confusion about this exemption,” however, by rejecting in large part the clarity of the IPCOMM hunters and handicrafters definition, the USFWS has only created the very confusion they set out to dispel.

Sealaska respectfully requests the USFWS adopt the definition which was created in conjunction with Alaska Natives by the IPCOMM working group. We oppose the current proposed definition entitled “Significantly altered from their natural form.”

Congress stated: “by stripping these rights from them [Alaska Natives], they will face the certain fate of cultural extinction.” Severely limiting what types of handicrafts can be made from sea otter as a method of discouraging Alaska Natives from harvesting marine mammals fails to consider the long-term cultural implications Congress so wisely sought to protect.
