

FAIR EXHIBIT SHOWS BIRDS
EAT BUGS THAT EAT CROPS

-----

Farmers who visited the State Fair yesterday were reminded of the house that Jack built when they watched one of the lantern slide series in the exhibit being conducted by the U. S. Biological Survey and the State game department.

Birds help the farmer is the message of the slides, but <sup>this</sup> help is sometimes overlooked and the slides give all the steps in understanding the farmer-bird alliance. Here is the way the slides put it: The birds eat the insects that eat the crops that make the farmer's income.

Another set in the <sup>Fair's wildlife</sup> ~~Biological Survey~~ exhibit urges farmers to make game a replacement crop and add to their income, and ~~two~~ others show <sup>that are</sup> game birds no longer abundant and the interior of a hunter's cabin well stocked with trophies.
