

Red Wolves Ahead

These pictures may be reproduced!

Draw a picture of a red wolf
on the sign!

The next four pages contains four special pictures of red wolves for you to color. They are original drawings by the artist Eva-Lena Rehnmark. You may use crayons or colored pencils. As you work on your pictures, use what you know about red wolves and about their eastern North Carolina habitat. What in the background of the pictures makes you know these red wolves live in "your neck of the woods?" Notice the special physical features of the red wolf. The long ears help to keep the animal cool during the hot humid summers in the South. Long ears and sensitive hearing may aid the red wolf in locating small mammals. Notice the long slender legs that make the red wolf a "far traveler" indeed. The pelage of the red wolf can range from tawny brown or tan to a darker shade of russet. Often the ears and the backs of the legs are tinged with red. Many times the underbelly is a creamy tan. The pelage of the red wolf is not as thick as that of most gray wolves. Do you know why?

When you have finished coloring the pictures, perhaps you can make mats and frames for them from heavy construction paper or rail board. Here's another idea! Bind the pictures together with yarn and present them as a "book" to someone special. Make a cover for your book. Read the text out loud to someone special so they can learn about red wolves, too!

Spring

Eva Lena Rehnmark

Summer

Eva Lena Rehmmark

Fall

Eva Lena Rehmark

Winter

Eva Lena Rehnmark