Marianne Burdick	Patterson	NY	United States	12563	Grizzlies of the Greater Yellowstone Ecosystem are still in danger. Climate change has affected their food sources and they don't have genetic diversity. They have a high mortality rate and low reproduction rate. Surrounding States are already planning to sell trophy hunting licenses to kill 100 grizzlies. The science prices all these issues and should be listened to. Logging, mining, and ranching interests support delisting for monetary gain. The ecotourism industry brings millions of dollars a year to the area because visitors want to see grizzlies and wolves. Please listen to science and don't let your legacy be a bear rug. #DontDelistGrizzlies

Helen McGinnis	Harman	WV	United States	26270	I want grizzlies to remain a part of our fauna as long as possible. Trophy hunting of large carnivores is unbecoming of us as a people.
Karen Van Atta	Salem	WV	United States	26426	I believe that grizzly bear populations are still too low to remove them from the ESA. Threats of hunting cannot be understated and illegal killings are likely to increase as well. I do not believe the genetic diversity of existing populations can be preserved without the ESA. I believe that delisting will put the long term viability of this species at grave risk. Considering the rash of proposed ESA delistings in the last few years that have been based on flawed and weak claims not justified by the scientific record, I am extremely skeptical that delisting the grizzly is justified.

Human behaviour is already responsible for significant Grizzly Bear mortality-----either directly via illegal hunting or via traffic deaths or indirectly due to their ever shrinking habitat. Please keep in mind if it is money that is driving this decision, that these iconic animals of our West are worth far more alive ----with specific regard to the tourist industry.

Michael Guest	Carmel	IN	United States	46033	Urgent! You're making a big mistake. Why are you doing an unnecessary thing like this? Don't you realize that you are putting another species at risk? Just the wolves, you can't strip the federal protections from the Grizzly Bears. This will put their health, population, and survive in greater danger. Also, this will make them more vulnerable to hunting, trapping and killing once again. We can't give up on them like the wolves. Please do the right thing and keep these Grizzly Bears protected. This is very important and serious.

With the decline of favorite food sources such as white bark pine nuts and cutthroat trout and the yet to be fully understood impact of climate change on this fragile species, the grizzly population in the Greater Yellowstone Ecosystem region should continue to receive federal protection for at least another decade. The lack of connectivity between the Yellowstone population and other grizzly populations is also important for the long-term viability for the bears. Delisting the grizzly bear would only compound this problem. I believe this delisting proposal would be a real step backward in grizzly recovery. Thank you for considering my comments.

It's one thing to delist the Grizzlies, but another thing to allow the states of Idaho, WY and MT to hunt and kill them to make them a head mount or a rug. When will society believe that there is something wrong with the people that hunt for sport.

Their population has not fully recovered and I am tired of having USFWS tell the taxpayers that these bears need management. This is another apex predator that can self regulate its population if ranchers would pay more attention to taking care of their livestock on public and private land with non lethal deterrents. If they truly cared about their livestock and the loss of money when they lose one to predation they would get a livestock guard dog and use fladry, noise deterrents, and range riders, just like they shuld for the wolves. Believe it or not, more people are getting turned off by eating beef and not just for health reasons.

Sharon Stewart	Colorado Springs	CO	United States	80923	I am writing to urge you to postpone delisting of the Yellowstone grizzly bear population. The proposal to remove Yellowstone grizzly bears from the endangered species list fails to preserve the progress made toward bear recovery. In fact, it will reverse it. The Greater Yellowstone grizzly bear is one of the United States's™ most iconic species. Held sacred by native communities for thousands of years in the west, the majestic grizzly has become a treasured symbol of our wild heritage. Visitors spend millions of dollars in the region every year, a vital part of many local economies, in the hopes of spotting a magnificent grizzly. The loss of the grizzly would be a loss for the entire region, and a disservice to the wildlife professionals, dedicated conservationists and wildlife advocates who have fought to save them. While grizzlies have made a comeback, their recovery is still a delicate and uncertain effort. Grizzly bears occupy less than 2% of their historic range in the lower 48 and reproduce very slowly, at a rate of only 1-2 cubs every few years. In the Yellowstone region, the growth of the population has stalled since the early 2000s, and there was a 6% decline last year. The proposed rule leaves Greater Yellowstone grizzlies in the crosshairs, as states have made clear their plans to reduce the population, including through trophy hunts. Management of grizzly bears outside of the national parks would be left completely up to the states, which have historically been hostile to bears and other large carnivores. The current proposal would allow states to exceed maximum bear deaths for years before any review, allowing for potentially irreversible damage, and would allow complete eradication of bears in some areas. The loss of female grizzlies to trophy hunters who will not be able to tell the difference between a male and female bear could cause a steep, quick decline before emergency action can be taken. Additionally, the Yellowstone grizzly population remains isolated; further limiting their range and numbers could prevent them from ever connecting to other grizzly populations. People and bears can coexist. We should not let bears slide back towards extinction because of misplaced political hostility towards these magnificent and beloved creatures. The end result of this proposal will be fewer bears limited to less land and with access to fewer resources necessary for survival. For too long, human beings have assumed animals are non-sentient, unintelligent and, therefore, ours to disrespect and exploit as we will. Today, often new research is published that denies humankind's previously arrogant assumptions about other species, and our lack of respect and care must change. Money and politics should not have the weight that they do on what is essentially an ethical question.

Hunting these bears would hurt their sustainability of their kind. We need more bears alive, not being someones foot wipe, that is not what they are here for. Bears need to maintain their Endangered status and remain safe from horrific slaughter. As an American citizen I am appalled that you would even consider removing their status of endangered. Protect these bears as you should be doing.

Claire Casey	Hailey	ID	United States	83333	Yes i want to protect the Grizzlies. But USFWS will kill them anyway the way they kill wolve here in Idaho. They need no reason other than a rancher lost a cow to a grizzly. Then they grab their gums, fly planes and kill at random . Claire Perricelli	Eureka	CA	United States	95501
Michael McLaughlin	Eureka	CA	United States	95502	Greater Yellowstone Ecosystem Grizzlies remain isolated from the main population, and delisting with its consequent state public hunting will so further diminish the genetic diversity of that population, that the delisting will effectively slowly extinguish the species. The grizzly still only occupies a very tiny percentage of its historical habitat. Until sufficient subpopulation connectivity is established, and grizzly can naturally disperse into the western US , no delisting is appropriate. State control of predators has proven to be excessively draconian, turning the tiny remnant predator populations of predators not ESA listed into persecuted and very like nonviable over the long-term, unless permanent bans on public hunting can be established. The grizzly has such a slow reproductive capacity, that this small and fragmented US population MUST remain protected for the foreseeable future, as the few states holding populations cannot be trusted to use science to understand the consequences of their already publicized intents to create a public market for the killing of these important apex predators and scavengers.

Florence Wagner	Lopez Island	WA	United States	98261	Grizzly bears are part of our heritage. We have bunches of movies about Mama Bear and her 2 or 3 adorable cubs. Books for kids tell about The 3 Bears. They have been "endangered species" for forty years...and are just now nearly up to desired numbers. So is it the smart thing to do...let the hunters have a field day and take the numbers back to where they have been for 40years..endangered?! Sounds like a little stupid to me. Is there some reason for this? Other than money for licenses? Winning ranchers' approval? What's the rush? It's an amazing thrill to be driving your grandchildren to Yellowstone and have one of them see a real live grizzly bear..and then two little cubs frolicking behind her! Are the Parks so desperate for money that they'll let the hunters kill these icons of the wild West? The bears are losing more of their territory every day. Let's give them a break and don't let the hunters shoot them . Keep the grizzlies protected.
