Pete, looks like the MN is not an option for the lynx (see below). I think there are some pockets of good snowshoe hare density in the eastern U.P. If this lynx is a wild dispersing that made it here via northwest Indiana, this is one lucky/tough lynx, I suspect she'll find her way back to MN or Canada anyway.

Dan,

I had a conversation with my leadership this morning (cc'd here) and the decision was made to not offer a permit to move the animal to Minnesota. Given the questionable origin of the animal, potential disease concerns to wild Lynx, and the low probability of survival, we just don't think this is the best option for this animal.

Please call me if you have any questions,

Lou

Hi Dan,

Good to talk to you just now. As we discussed, I am going to connect you with Lou Cornicelli, our Wildlife Research and Permits Manager, with whom you can coordinate on this project.

Cynthia and I have already briefed Lou, and he's happy to discuss the details with you.

Lou is at 651-259-5202; lou.cornicelli@state.mn.us. I'm also copying John Erb, our large carnivore biologist, so that he is in the loop.

Best,

Rich

Subject: Lynx
Importance: High

Cynthia and Rich,

We captured a 1-year old female lynx in Michigan's thumb a week ago. The lynx is currently at the Detroit zoo and is healthy – it was evaluated by the veterinarian at the Detroit zoo. We would like to release the lynx in the wild and, currently, our preferred option would be to release it in MN – where there is an existing lynx population, suitable habitat and prey base.

Do you consider this a viable option? If you're okay with it - Is there paperwork we need to fill out?

I'm in and out of the office today but can be reached on my personal cell (b) (6). We're trying to make a decision asap – so if you could please give me a call – that would be greatly appreciated.

Thanks!!

Dan
