9. For species listed under the U.S. Endangered Species Act, please be aware that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service (Service) must make a finding that your activities will enhance or benefit wild populations of the species involved. While we will communicate with the range country for the species you will hunt or hunted when making the required findings, if you have any information that could support this finding, it would be helpful for our review if you could provide it. Please submit such information on a separate page with your application.

a. Do you have any information regarding the population status or trend data on the species hunted?

I hunted three days every day I saw numerous animals including several mature male Markhor. On day three I witnessed a group of males, females and young totaling 60 animals. The local community protects them, no poaching is occuring.

b. In order to hunt, you likely paid for licenses or trophy fees. What were those fees and do you have any information on how those funds were used by either the landowner, local community, or government?

My hunt cost was $150,000 US Dollars, I don't know what the actual tag was purchased for at auction by the out fitter. After my hunt the local community had a celebration, this was attended by officials in the game department as well as prominent community leaders. There was many thanks and appreciation that 80% of the tag cost was going to the local community. Speeches were given by both the wildlife department and community leaders in that regard. No discussion was had on how the community would use the funds. I can share other hunt situations where the funds were used to support education, new water sources and hydro power for the local community.

c. Do you have information on other funding activities that are being carried out, or were carried out, by the safari outfitter, professional hunter, concession holder, or landowner that provide a conservation benefit to the species being hunted/species hunted?

I am not aware of funding activities related to this hunt. I do see at conventions hunts being donated by the outfitters and auctioned with the money going to conservation.

- Is being imported, exported, or re-exported by or on behalf of the hunter as part of the transfer from its country of origin ultimately to the hunter's country of usual residence; and

Customs Rules on Discharge of Importers Liability for Duties

The U.S. Customs Service has issued a final amendment of the regulations to provide an alternative procedure for an Importer record to pay duties on imported merchandise through a licensed customhouse broker. Present rules provide for the payment of duties to Customs by a broker on behalf of the importer. Under the alternative procedure, the Importer may elect to submit to the broker a separate check or bank draft for the duties payable to the "U.S. Customs Service". The broker would then deliver the Importer's check or bank draft to Customs. The new rule also requires brokers to provide written notification to their clients, advising that if I the client is an Importer of record, payment to the broker will not relieve the client of liability for Customs charges in the event that the charges are not paid by the broker. Brokers will be required to provide this notification to all active clients annually during the month of February. Additionally, brokers will be required to provide such information on a power of attorney executed on or after the effective date of the new rule. These amendments are effective as of September 27, 1982.

To Whom It May Concern:

U.S. CITES permit # 19US42506D/9 issued to Mr. Justin Haynes in August of 2019 has been misplaced in a recent office move, and needs to be reissued in order to proceed with import. This shipment has not yet occurred however, the importer is standing by for an original in order to move forward. I am requesting a replacement U.S. CITES permit, and if the original is found, the original permit will be returned to the Division of Management Authority.

Thank You,

LION MANAGEMENT PLAN FOR KHAMAB KALAHARI RESERVE

khamab
Kalahari Reserve

INTRODUCTION

The management of lions on small fenced game reserves has always been a contentious issue. There are two schools of thought; one promotes a hands-off approach to lion management as far as possible, while the other suggests the need for intensive management of the lion populations. Up till now not one of these points of view have been proven as the correct approach, although the intensive management of lions by far exceeded a hands-off lion management as the method of choice by reserve managers of small game reserves. Although the majority of reserve managers would prefer a hands-off approach, they feel that they cannot afford to let the lion population go, and in very small reserve they are right. Despite very intensive management of the lion populations, a large majority of reserves still experienced perceived "problems" with their populations. These " problems" were very rapid population growths resulting in high predation impacts on the prey populations, as well as issues with keeping the genetic integrity intact in the small populations.

Few reserves or national parks in South Africa are large enough to allow for a completely natural predator system, and all will require some sort of management intervention to a larger or lesser degree. However, the level of management intervention will depend on the objectives off each reserve, as well as the reason why they choose to have lions on the reserve

More and more studies are revealing how vital top predators are in the operation of ecosystem processes, which filters right down to the different trophic levels. Most lion reintroductions are for eco-tourism purposes rather than purely ecological reasons, but even though this is the case for most reserves, the value that they bring to the operation of the ecosystems is not always realized. The reserves whose primary motivation for introducing lions are for purposes of ecotourism, adopt mostly an intensive lion management approach to keep lion numbers within strict predetermined boundaries. This intensive management approach relies heavily on contraception, vasectomies and culling as a way of achieving their objectives. A small minority of reserves, on the other hand, sees lions as a very important part of the system and includes the importance of allowing the system to function with as little management intervention as possible as an objective in their management plans. This principle should also filter through to predator management plans, which should attempt to come as close to a hands-off approach on lion management as possible. However, the effect of a largely hands-off approach on "small" fenced reserves is still unknown, and it is unsure whether this approach will lead to natural population control measures (as seen in very large or open systems) to come into effect.

Lions have the capability to recover rapidly after disturbances, leading to rapid population growths on reserves after new populations get established, and quickly exceeds the pre-determined carrying capacity based on impact on prey populations. Previously managers reacted to this by regular translocation of lions to new reserves. However, options for translocations have largely disappeared as a result of excess lions available at several reserves across the country. This led to an increasing dependency on culling and birth control measures in an attempt to keep the fast population growth rates under control.

However, this approach is symptomatic and does not address to the underlying issues of why population "problems" occur. The challenge of developing a management plan is to find ways to mimic natural control mechanisms, thereby targeting the cause of ecological issues rather than treating the symptoms.

In natural lion populations, the high infanticide rates and associated social consequences as a result of regular turn-over of dominant males in prides lead to relatively stable populations. However, in small and highly controlled population this is not the case, and males tend to stay in "control" of prides for very long periods, leading to pride instability and high cub survival. Also, regular population control actions, like culling and removals, prevent density dependent population control mechanisms from coming into effect. Two typical density dependent control mechanisms are age of first reproduction of females, and litter size. In low density populations lions breed at a younger age, have bigger litters, and the survival rates of litters are much higher. Therefore, regular culling or removal of lions leads to an increase in the above mentioned factors, resulting in faster population growth.

One of the biggest concerns for managers is the impact that lions have on the prey populations of small fenced reserves. This problem is exaggerated by inappropriate management actions like regular removal and/or supplementation of prey. Also, coupled with the factors in the previous paragraph, lack of social stability because of high male tenures and slow male turnovers, often resulting in several individuals rather than prides on a reserve, which increase the impact on the prey population.

One of the biggest mistakes is that managers ignore the temporal and spatial variability in ecosystems, and want to keep the system as stable as possible based on pre-determined "carrying capacities". This is largely driven because of economic demands and expectations, coupled with the demands of tourism and/or trophy hunting. Very few reserves will allow for the natural control mechanisms and the associated fluctuations to take its course.

Despite being the ideal management approach and the advantages associated with letting natural control mechanisms to come into play, it must also be kept in mind that it will probably not be possible in small fences systems, Madikwe Game Reserve being an example. Despite high lion densities and some natural control mechanisms starting to have an effect, the densities was still not high enough to ensure a population that can function without any management interference. If left completely, the population will without doubt reach a point where the lion population will regulate itself. However, the turning point in the population density where this will occur is unknown, and the associated impact in prey populations means that no reserve in South Africa has been brave enough or had the capacity to let this process run its full course. Therefore, as mentioned elsewhere, the objectives of each conservation area or reserve will determine at which point in time management will intervene, and what interventions they will use.

1.9 Potential for enlarging the property

When Khamab started in 2007, there was an extensive drive to acquire a large portion of land, and several farms were bought and consolidated to shape the 95 500ha property.

Although it is not priority at the moment, there is potential for enlarging the current property by purchasing other neighbouring properties if they become available on the market. KKR will pursue these options if they are available at the right price in order to consolidate the current reserve.

1.10 Specifications of the perimeter fence

The fence line has been inspected and approved and are up to DACE specifications for the keeping of large game and predators.

The total height of the fence is 2.4m. The bottom 1.2m is fenced with bonnox, with 8 steel wires completing the top 1.2m.

On the inside of the fence there are five electrified strands at heights of 20cm, 50cm, 120cm, 180cm and 240cm as per specifications.

200mm line – on a 22cm double offset bracket with earth
500mm line – on a 22cm double offset bracket with earth
1200mm line – on a 22cm offset bracket
1800mm line – on a 40cm double offset bracket with earth
2400mm line – on a 40cm double offset bracket with earth.

An additional trip and earth wire about 60cm away from the main fence, and 10-20cm from the ground with an additional earth wire.

The voltage of the fence ranges between 6000V-8000V, and the entire fence line of 230km is patrolled on a daily basis.

The fence line is kept clean from plant material by the application of herbicides at a distance of 1m on both sides of the fence. A further 4m strip on the inside and a 2m strip on the outside are disked with a tractor and disk once a year to keep vegetation clear from the fence.

2 ECOLOGICAL

2.1 General climatic and hydrological data

2.1.1 Rainfall

Khamab Kalahari Reserve falls within the summer rainfall region of Southern Africa, with the majority of rain occurring between October and April. The mean annual rainfall according to farmers in the area is estimated at 320 mm, with a high annual coefficient of variation (CV) of 34%. This means that the area is semi-arid with a rainfall pattern that is erratic and unpredictable for any one year or series of years (Collinson & Brett 2007)

As to be expected in an arid environment, the annual mean rainfall across the reserve varies a lot between season to season. The period of 2011 to 2013 was very dry, with the 2012/13 season being particularly dry with only 188.3mm on average across the reserve. The perception during the 2013/14 season was that it was also very dry, but that was largely due to long periods during the rainfall season without any rain, and then the figures were bolstered when the majority of the rainfall all came in a short space of time towards the end of the season, as can be seen lower down in this document.

Table 4: Annual rainfall figures at the different weather stations on Khamab from July 2010 to June 2014

	Rainfall (mm)				Annual mean
Weather station	2010/11	2011/12	2012/13	2013/14
Esperance	502.6	285.8	223.8	423.2	358.9

Sweetwater	401.8	249	164.8	447.6	315.8
Mean	416.5	256.9	188.3	414.1	318.9

This rainfall pattern can often be visually seen during the rainfall season, when thundershowers often pass the reserve on the south-eastern and eastern side, or on the north-western side. This is also reflected in the rainfall figures in Table 1 above.

2.1.2 Temperature

Since the reserve started measuring temperature in 2010, the highest temperature measured on Khamab was 43.2°C which was measured at Esperance in October 2011, and the coldest temperature recorded was -7.1°C at Sweetwater in July 2012.

Over the last four years, the three months with the warmest mean temperatures were November, December and January, with January having the highest mean temperature of 26.7°C.

However, the highest mean maximum temperature is 40.3°C during November, followed by October and December with 39.7 °C each.

On average over the last four years, June has been the coldest month with a mean of 12.5°C, followed by July with 12.6°C.

The lowest mean minimum temperatures have been in June with -4.5°C, followed by July with -4.4°C.

2.1.3 Hydrology

The region is drained by the Molopo River. Although this river meanders for a great distance along the border between South African and Botswana before eventually joining the Orange River below the Augrabies Falls, it seldom has any surface flow. The fossilized Pephane River flows through the area to the southwest of KKR, but no other river courses (neither perennial nor ephemeral) are present on the reserve. Short-lived floods of the Molopo have occurred in recent years which attract a large number of water bird species into the area.

Accordingly, the key feature of the area is the complete absence of perennial surface water. This phenomenon has been the most important influence on the presence, abundance and distribution of indigenous plant and animal species.

Another significant feature of the area is the presence of endorheic pans (pans that do not possess an outflow). A number of large pans are present on the reserve. After the occurrence of heavy thunderstorms they may hold water for some time.

For the following reasons these pans add incredible value to a wildlife conservation project such Khamab Kalahari Reserve:

- The distribution of game animals (both herbivores and carnivores) tends to be highly concentrated on these pans and their immediate surrounds.
- This is due the soil nutrient status and soil moisture retention capacity of these pans being significantly higher than that of the "sea" of red sands making up the substrate of most of the area
- The presence of ephemeral surface water in these pans after thunder storms allows for "mini migrations" of certain water dependant game species (e.g. zebra) to grazing in areas that they normally avoid due to the absence of perennial surface water

The water table is generally very deep with boreholes being sunk to depths of 200 m. Due to the critical importance of groundwater in this semi-arid area with no perennial surface water, boreholes and the immediate surrounding areas are regarded as sensitive areas.

2.2 General description of geology and soils

The most visible geological feature of KKR is the substrate of red windblown sands of the Kalahari Group which occur uniformly over most of the reserve at depths which in places exceed 1.2 meters. These Kalahari sands are underlain by tillites, sandstones, mudstone and shale's. However, due to the depth of the sand substrate these rock formations are not visible on the landscape surface. Localised areas of exposed limestone (calcrete) occur along the Molopo River and in and around the edges of the pans. The Molopo river course is underlain by quartzites.

This uniformity of substrate on KKR is very different to most other areas in South Africa where landscapes are normally characterised by a mosaic of different soil and rock substrates. A less visible but, nevertheless, important additional feature of the geology of KKR is that groundwater is found at great depths beneath the deep layer of sandy substrate

Apart from its characteristic red colour and sandy texture, a key feature of the soil substrate is its relatively high fertility status. Another key feature is the very limited water-retaining capacity of the soil and the high infiltration and flatness means that there is virtually no runoff and all rain penetrates the soil. Soil erosion is thus of very little concern in this part of the Kalahari.

On a more scientific note these soils can be described as generally well-aggregated (apedal) and freely drained with a high base status which is the result of limited leaching under an arid climate. Soils of the river beds and pans are more alluvial in nature and their fertility status is even higher than that of the surrounding red sands. Occasional patches of lighter coloured sands (whitish to grey) are found in small depressions that intersperse the sea of red sands.

2.3 Vegetation Biome and Bioregion

KKR falls within the Savanna Biome of South Africa. This biome, which covers one-third of the country, is the most widespread of the biomes found in South Africa. As there are considerable climatic and therefore species variations within the Savanna Biome, with an east to west declining rainfall gradient, it has been considered useful to sub-divide this biome into six bioregions. Accordingly, KKR falls within the Eastern Kalahari Bushveld Bioregion which is that part of the Savanna Biome that extends westwards from Mafikeng to the Botswana border in the west and the Orange River in the south.

At a more local level the vegetation type in which KKR occurs has been classified and named in various ways over the years by various authors as follows:

- Kalahari Thornveld - Acocks (1975)
- Kalahari Plains Thorn Bushveld – Low & Rebelo (1996)
- Molopo Bushveld – Mucina & Rutherford (2004)

The above vegetation types are thus essentially synonymous with each other but for convenience the most current of these, namely Molopo Bushveld, will be used in this report. In broad terms the Molopo Bushveld may be described as follows:

- Structure – open woodland to a closed shrubland
- Prominent tree species – Acacia erioloba, Boscia albitrunca, Ziziphus mucronata, Acacia mellifera, A. luederitzii and Terminalia sericea
- Prominent shrub species – Acacia haematoxylon, Acacia hebeclada, Grewia flava, Rhus burchelli, Rhus tenuinervis, Lycium cinereum, Euclea undulate, Ehretia rigida and Rhigozum trichotomum
- Prominent grass species – Schmidtia pappaphoroides, S. kalahariensis, Stipagrostis uniplumis. S. ciliata, Cenchrus ciliaris, Andropogon chinensis, Aristida diffusa, Digitaria eriantha, Urochloa mozambicensis, Panicum coloratum, Setaria verticilata, Cynodon dactylon, Eragrostis lehmanniana, E. rigidior; Heteropogon contortus and Melinis repens.

Large specimens of Acacia erioloba, commonly known as the Camel Thorn, are a key feature of this veld type and for that matter the Kalahari as a whole. Unfortunately, large specimens of this species are scarce over most parts of KKR except on the deeper sands along the banks of the Molopo River. Their scarcity in KKR and the surrounding farms is attributed by some local land owners to large scale felling of the larger trees for fence posts and charcoal production in the past. However, field observations suggest that the scarcity of large specimens is more likely to be substrate influenced (large trees confined to pockets of deeper sand underlain by a relatively high water table) and hence a natural ecological phenomenon rather than man induced.

The floors of the scattered pans of the Molopo Bushveld are dominated by grasses such as Sporobolus coromandelianus, Enneapogon desvauxii and shrubs such as Rhigozum trichotomum and Monechma incanum.

The essential characteristics of the vegetation of the Molopo Bushveld can be summarised as follows:

- Low tree and shrub diversity: This is in keeping with an observed marked decrease in the diversity of tree and shrub species along an east to west gradient within the Savanna Biome. Accordingly species to area ratio in this part of the Kalahari is less than half the average for the Savanna Biome. The cause of this is the combination of the low erratic summer rainfall, high evapo-transpiration and winter frosts. In such harsh climatic conditions deep soils are needed for trees and shrubs to survive. Thus if the deep sands were not present the tree and shrub diversity of this area would be even lower.

- Low community/habitat diversity: Prior to the impact of cattle farming the vegetation was, according to historical accounts, conspicuously uniform throughout i.e. open woodland dominated by Acacia erioloba and Boscia albitrunca with a low shrub under storey of Grewia flava. The exceptions to this are where Terminalia sericea thickets on patches of deep white sands and the sparsely scattered pans that is virtually devoid of shrubs and trees. This tendency towards vegetation uniformity, and hence a low diversity of vegetation communities and habitats, is due to:
  - The extremely harsh and evenly spread climatic conditions on the one hand
  - Together with the very uniform nature of the topography, altitude, geology and soils, throughout the area.

  Such uniformity is very unlike most other areas in South Africa where high variability of the components of the physical environment (especially soil patchiness) causes high variability in the vegetation pattern and hence high habitat diversity.

- High palatability and nutritional value: Despite the low species and habitat diversity, the vegetation is extremely palatable and nutritious. In sharp contrast to other areas in South Africa almost every tree, shrub and grass species that occur in the Molopo Bushveld are readily grazed or browsed by domestic and wild herbivores alike. This is due to the fertile and alkaline nature of the red Kalahari sands. The end result of this is that, despite the low vegetation diversity of the area, the Molopo Bushveld has the potential to carry a wide variety of large wild herbivores and carnivores.

2.3.1 Summary of the vegetation of Khamab Kalahari Reserve

The KKR consists of three distinct major plant communities with different sub-communities and variants totalling 11 different vegetation-cum-habitat units.

According to Mucina & Rutherford (2006) the vegetation of the study area falls within the Molopo Bushveld (SVk11) also known as Kalahari Plains Thorn Bushveld by Low & Rebelo (1996) with the Southern Kalahari Salt Pans (AZi4) vegetation type comprising small sections within KKR Reserve.

The vegetation of the Molopo Bushveld (SVk11) is described as open woodland and closed shrublands. The trees Acacia erioloba, Boscia albitrunca and Terminalia sericea together with the shrubs Lycium cinerium and Rhigozum trichotomum are characteristic. Dominant grasses include Cenchrus ciliaris, Aristida stipitata, Aristida meridionalis, Eragrostis lehmanniana with common forbs such as Hermannia tomentosa, Limeum fenestrate, Sienna italica, Geigeria ornativa and Hermbstaedtia fleckii. Biogeographically important taxa include the trees Acacia luederitzii var. luederitzii and Acacia haematoxylon and the graminoids Antephora argentia, Megaloprotachne albescens and Panicum kalahariense (Mucina & Rutherford 2006).

Unfortunately large sections of this vegetation type has been degraded due to human actions such as agriculture and intensive tree removal using herbicides that has led to bush densification by plant species such as the tree Acacia mellifera, the shrub Grewia flava, and the forbs Geigeria ornativa and Tribulus terrestris to name a few.

Communities 1 and 2 of the KKR are classified within this vegetation type. Community 1 (Verbesina encelioides-Schmidtia kalahariensis Grassland) is typical of water points and degraded areas (old cattle kraal sites). It occurs as small units scattered throughout the reserve. Some of these areas are bare open patches and should be monitored to prevent the vegetation from overgrazing, while the other areas have relatively good herbaceous cover and provides grazing to animals for short periods. The Grewia retinervis-Acacia erioloba woodland (community 2) comprises the largest section of the reserve. The area is relatively homogeneous and flat with different variants mainly as a result of past management practices. These areas provide good grazing to animals with various important grazing grass species (e.g. Schmidtia pappophoroides, Stipagrostis uniplumis, and Eragrostis lehmanniana) prominent and dominant. No erosion was observed. Large scale herbicide application has unfortunately resulted in a catastrophic decline in woody species and can be seen with the many dead tree trunks remaining only (see photo below).

Although these actions may lead to an increase in grass production in the short term, it eventually leads to total degradation of diverse and species rich ecosystems. Trees and grasses are elements of this ecosystem and if excessive disturbances occur in the one element it will also influence the other. Trees play an important role in the ecosystem where they provide shade and cooler, more moist conditions to grass and other forb species preferring such conditions. Apart from also being a source of food for browsers, they also act as resting and sleeping places for animals and generally have a higher diversity of species growing underneath them. Grasses are important in protecting the soil from erosion and exposure to the environment. They also provide nutrients to the soil due to decomposition of dead material while being the only source of food for grazers. Although there is a constant competition between the grass and tree layer there are also interspecific completion between different tree species as well as between the different grass species themselves. Thus a disturbance in any one of the tree or grass layer will not only have an influence on the grass-tree interaction, but also on grass-grass and tree-tree interactions. That could therefore lead to a complete change in species composition and dominance.

Trees are normally removed to provide improved grazing. If selective removal is affected it could indeed improve the production potential of the veld. However, if large scale non-selective clearing takes place it will lead to an increase in production of the grass layer in the short term due to the higher nutrient conditions of the soil where trees used to be. However, once these nutrient sources have been depleted over a few years the high production grasses will die off quickly only to be permanently replaced by pioneer and low production grasses. At the same time indigenous invasive woody species could easily establish and form dense impenetrable stands leading to a further decline in grass production of the veld.

Many of these changes have been observed within the study area, where various species such as Grewia flava and Acacia mellifera have become prominent in areas where large-scale tree removal has taken place. The grass layer in these areas has also become very homogeneous with only one or two grass species dominating. Thus a loss in biodiversity has occurred in these areas. Trees also act as refuge areas for different herbaceous species. This has also been observed during the field surveys with most of the different grass and forb species recorded per plot occurring underneath trees and dead tree trunks.

It therefore seems as though the previous large-scale tree removal did negatively affect some areas of the reserve. However, the fact that no intensive grazing has taken place for many years has allowed some areas to show signs of recovery. Large areas typical of Acacia erioloba-Boscia albitrunca veld are still present with higher species richness than the bush cleared areas.

The Southern Kalahari Salt Pans (AZi4) comprises low grasslands on pan bottoms and are sometimes devoid of vegetation (Mucina & Rutherford 2006). These pans are located on sandy sediments of the Cenozoic Kalahari Group and consist of sandy loam sand with a high calcium and phosphate content. These pans are exposed to the environment for the largest part of the year with water present only for short periods in the rainy season (Mucina & Rutherford 2006). Some larger pans do however keep water for longer period, but the pans are mostly shallow.

These pans are all present within the reserve and add to the diversity and species richness of the area. No signs of overutilization or degradation were observed during the surveys and the vegetation is typical of the vegetation type.

2.3.2 Species lists

The list of species identified during the vegetation surveys are presented in Appendix 1.

2.4 Disturbed or degraded areas such as bush encroachment and soil erosion

As a result of the flat topography and sandy soils into which water quickly infiltrates, as well as a good vegetation cover, soil erosion from both water and wind is largely absent from the reserve.

See the detailed description of degraded areas as a result of the use of herbicides to control bush encroachment in the past as described above in the summary of the vegetation.

SECTION B: MANAGEMENT GOALS AND OBJECTIVES

3 CONSERVATION ON KHAMAB KALAHARI RESERVE

Khamab was established in 2007 as a private venture in the Molopo district of the Eastern Kalahari Bushveld. It started with several properties being bought and amalgamated into a single property which is fenced with electrified game/bonnox fencing around the entire outside perimeter of 230km, with all the internal fences removed. The result is a property of just over 90 000ha which is completely open for animals to roam freely.

The size of the property makes it the biggest conservation area in the Northwest province by some margin, and in that regard Khamab plays a key role in conservation in the Northwest province. KKR's size means that it conserves a significant portion of the Eastern Kalahari Bushveld.

The vision, mission and key objectives of Khamab Kalahari Reserve is given below, emphasising the commitment of the reserve to conservation as well as highlighting that conservation is the only objective of the reserve (Collinson & Brett 2007).

3.1 Khamab Vision, Mission and objectives

3.1.1 Vision

The vision for KKR is to create a game reserve that:

- Comprises unspoilt landscapes and habitats that visually typify the Kalahari Bushveld.
- Sustains the full spectrum of African wild herbivores and carnivores that naturally occurred in such landscapes/habitats in the past.
- Enables the ecological processes of the system to function with as little management intervention as possible.

3.1.2 Mission

In realising this vision, KKR's mission is to establish a conservation icon that is held in high esteem both nationally and internationally for its positive contribution to wildlife conservation and the community at large.

3.1.3 Key Objectives

KKR's mission will be accomplished through the achievement of the following key objectives:

- Re-establish and sustain viable populations of the full spectrum of wild herbivore and predator species that occurred naturally in the Kalahari Bushveld in the past by undertaking a scientifically based reintroduction program and thereafter applying sound conservation practices
- Attain a high level of success in the conservation of endangered species such as black rhino, cheetah, wild dog and birds of prey by conducting comprehensive research programs and state of the art conservation management
- Eliminate those plant and animal species that are deemed to be alien to this bioregion or for other reasons ethically unacceptable including domestic livestock

- Rehabilitate the Kalahari Bushveld landscape to resemble its former natural state by removing all signs of the visually unappealing structures of past farming and other land use and land development practices
- Restore/simulate the natural ecological processes (e.g. fire frequency, surface water distribution, migration, herbivory and predation) and vegetation pattern/composition of the Kalahari Bushveld that have been disrupted/depleted/distorted by past farming practices.

Therefore, in striving to achieve these key objectives described above, the primary reason for keeping lions on Khamab is to have the full spectrum of carnivores that occurred in this landscape in the past. Coupled with this is to allow the ecological processes of the system to function with as little intervention as possible, of which lions as top predator should play a vital role.

3.2 Conservation partnerships and memberships

As captured in the vision of the reserve, Khamab wants to make a positive contribution to the conservation of wildlife and ecological processes, and hence the commitment to contribute to conservation at all levels. This includes the conservation of endangered species like wild dog (Lycaon pictus), cheetah (Acinonyx jubatus) and black rhino (Diceros bicornis).

In this regards Khamab participate and partners in the following conservation groups:

- Wilddog Advisory Group
- National Cheetah Metapopulation
- Lion Management Forum (LiMF) – one of the founding members

3.6 Waterhole distribution policy

The general belief amongst wildlife managers in South Africa is that "the more water points provided, the more productive the wildlife and the healthier the vegetation". Put another way it is widely believed that many closely spaced water points is the universal remedy for achieving wildlife conservation objectives. This belief is unfortunately based on "intuition" rather than "good science". As a consequence of this much money and time is spent on the development and maintenance of permanent water points when it could have been spent better on other. In opposition to this "intuitive" approach, a "good science" approach to permanent surface water provision has been slowly gaining acceptance over the past two decades. For example it is now firmly entrenched in Kruger National Park – South Africa's premier protected area – as the outcome of some bitter lessons learnt along the way viz. declines in rare species numbers, undesirable eruptions in elephant numbers and bush encroachment due to the past practice a dense network of permanent water points throughout the Park. This gradual move to a "good science" approach has also been influenced by experience gained in semi-arid areas elsewhere - including both wildlife and domestic livestock grazing systems - where permanent water point provision was based on intuition rather than science. (Collinson and Brett, 2007) .

The effect that the distribution of surface water has on heterogeneity and ecological processes in a system is better understood, and is starting to play a much bigger role in how ecosystems are managed. The use of surface water by animals influences faunal distribution patterns across a range of spatial scales like landscape patterns. This is largely attributed to how different species utilise space at various distances from water sources. Some animals like gemsbok and eland would not need close association with water sources, while others like impala, buffalo and elephant would have a much closer association with available water sources. This in turn will influence species like lion, which tend to associate more with water sources, and how they impact on prey populations (Gaylard et al 2003)

Water distribution will also create community level patterns. These patterns that are influenced by surface water availability and distribution include direct changes to faunal compositional diversity and changes brought about indirectly by changing the frequency or intensity of ecosystem processes such as competition. An example of this is the requirements of diverse habitats necessary for the coexistence of the spectrum of carnivores, where cheetah prefers more open tree savanna and wild dog more densely wooded areas. Extensive water provision will lead to homogenization of the landscape vegetation structure, which in turn threatens the coexistence of carnivores (Gaylard et al 2003)

As said, surface water distribution will influence vegetation patterns on a landscape as well as ecosystem and population levels. On a landscape level the water distribution influence the landscape mosaic of vegetation condition and type, for example the influence that elephants or some intensive grazer will have on vegetation closer to water sources. On an ecosystem level water distribution will influence the formation of piosphere effects around water sources, where the increasing distance away from water source tend to decrease the density of the woody component and an increase in the grass component. The quantity and quality of the herbaceous community tends to improve with distance away from a water source (Gaylard et al 2003)

From these lessons learnt the challenge for KKR is to approach the provision of artificial water points for game in a way that is in accord with its vision and the foundation for the achievement of its objectives (Section B Point 3.1).

Very few reserves have the space available to implement this strategy with regards to water distribution. KKR does have enough space and are in the position to implement this management strategy.

When the reserve was started, there were more than 100 water points on KKR, and the distance between these points is in most cases were less than 5 km, giving a maximum foraging distance from water of 2.5 km. They were maintained by pumping and piping from boreholes. Prior to the acquisition of the land for establishing KKR, the primary purpose of these water points was to provide drinking water for cattle. On a few properties they provided for game animals.

From lessons learnt from the Kruger Park "learning by doing experiment" and from similar experiences elsewhere, it was recognised that KKR's conservation vision and objectives (as described elsewhere) would certainly not have been realised if the permanent water points on KKR were maintained in place as they existed at the time and that the prevailing water points had to be drastically reduced in number and realigned in cognisance of the ecological principles implied in the management objectives and modern thinking with regards to water distribution as described earlier.

Accordingly, the plan for the KKR was to reduce the number of permanent water points to a total of 8 and locate them as indicated in the configuration presented in Figure 13 below.

However, some of these old waterholes are being kept as temporary waterholes that can be used in the event of very severe droughts to provide water points in areas far from the permanent water points where some forage may still be in existence. To provide for such exceptional circumstances, five such water points and associated infrastructure (equipped boreholes, pipelines) will be maintained in a dormant state but in good working order.

In deciding on the number and configuration of permanent water points for KKR the following was taken into account:

- If restoration/simulation/maintenance of ecological processes was the sole objective of KKR then the ideal water point configuration would be either:
  - A single water point situated in the centre of the game reserve; or
  - A line of water points in the north that simulates a linear source of surface water - as would have been the case during the times when the Molopo River was perennial.
- However, to carry populations of water dependant species that are large enough for sustaining genetic viability, this ideal configuration will not suffice – especially for elements of the big 5 such as lion, elephant, buffalo and rhino
- Sustaining these species is an essential element of KKR's vision as well as for achieving the secondary objective (strategy) of creating meaningful economic activity on KKR through tourism and trophy hunting
- Furthermore, for tourism to be successful it is preferable to have more water points (and hence more localised concentrations of animals) spread over a wider geographic area than that of the ideal configuration – but with the rider that water points still need to be widely spaced from each other so as to encourage these desirable localised concentrations of animals from game viewing i.e. the number and spacing of water points needs to be optimised
- This desired optimum configuration of water points for tourism is also of great benefit for reducing territorial conflict (especially black rhino) and conflict between carnivore prides/packs (especially lions and wild dogs).
- While from a tourism perspective it is ideal to place water points on pans it is important from a species diversity perspective to leave a large number of pans free of permanent water i.e. water independent species (springbok, gemsbok, hartebeest) are highly reliant on pans for grazing and when permanent water is provided on pans these water independent species have to compete with water dependent species for this grazing
- Water points were moved away from fences as far as possible to reduce the density of prey animals along the fence and the possible associated effect of predators regularly chasing prey into fence lines
- One pan was kept on a large pan to provide the spectacular views associated with large numbers of animals on a large open pan
- Pans were positioned on natural depressions or very small pans (panlets)

On the basis of the above, the number and configuration of permanent water points indicated in Figure 13 represents what is considered to be a balanced compromise between competing objectives and strategies for the start-up phase. The merits of this compromise will then be evaluated over time by the process of adaptive management. In the meantime this start up configuration will be strictly maintained in place and only considered for modification if the evaluation of monitoring feedback clearly indicates that objectives and strategies are not being achieved – and that this is clearly a consequence of the behaviour of populations and processes not conforming to the assumptions discussed earlier.

Waterholes were kept as natural as possible to simulate ephemeral water sources that are found in these depressions after rainstorms, albeit permanent in this case. Where these depressions were very sandy, clay from the Molopo River was used to seal these depressions to create waterholes. This provides a natural feel to the waterhole, as well as provide place for animals to roll, as well as provide habitat for frogs etc. See the photographs below of the water points on Khamab

There are no permanent open water on KKR, so these waterholes are all pumped from boreholes through and extensive pipe network system.

3.7 Fire management

Fire is a common disturbance in many terrestrial ecosystems, where it consumes enormous quantities of biomass. In Africa savannas, fire, climatic variability, soils, and large herbivores interact to shape the vegetation, driving spatial and temporal heterogeneity across the landscape. Fire affects the plant communities through large scale, episodic removal of biomass and the delivery, in some cases, of lethal temperatures to plant materials. It has been described as a large generalist herbivore (Bond 1997) that sometimes competes with, sometimes replaces, and sometimes facilitates herbivory. Many studies have shown that the exclusion of fire from savannas leads to an increase in woody biomass, and this has been interpreted that fires are essential for the persistence of savannas. However, in dry environments the exclusion of fire does not lead to the formation of forests, but rather to a denser form of savanna (Van Wilgen and Scholes 1997). Almost all plant species in arid savannas are able to survive repeated, frequent burning largely by resprouting. Pockets dominated by fire-intolerant species are not a feature of the landscape. Debates on the role of fire in such savannas therefore focus not on the conservation of fire-sensitive species but rather on their role in promoting dominance by certain species over others. Grass-tree coexistence may be made possible by separation of rooting niches, with trees having sole access to water in deeper soil horizons, and grasses having preferential access to, and being superior competitors for, water in the surface soil horizons.

Veld burning in conservation areas has for decades been, and still are, a contentious aspect of the management of southern African vegetation for three basic reasons. Fire is an obvious ecosystem driver (Walker 1987); there are important gaps in our understanding about the actual effects of fire including the interactive effects together with other factors such as herbivory (Bond 1997); and multiple practical fire management options appear to be available to managers (Bradstock et al. 1998). These three factors imply that managers realise the importance of fire, feel the need to choose between options to manage it, but acknowledge that the decisions are currently being taken on imperfect knowledge.

Natural fires as a result of lightning played an important role in the development of ecosystems in Africa (Biggs 2004), and the fire climax grasslands and the savanna areas owe their very nature to their long history of fire which has apparently played such an important role in their development. One area of continuing debate is the understanding of the role of early man in shaping the landscape with fire, as contrasted to a hands-off wilderness management. Modern human impact has grossly affected the historic natural fire pattern, or pattern which could reasonably be expected to prevail had human population growth and cultural practice not changed so rapidly and dramatically (Braack 1997). Humans have created roads, firebreaks, cultivated areas etc. which serves as barriers for the spread of fires over large areas. Also the tendency of modern humans to see fires as "destructive" and " bad" led to natural fires that were put out too often, probably resulting in more "damage" to the ecology than would have happened if the fires were left to burn.

Scientists realised that fire was a key determinant of savanna ecosystems and one of a suite of drivers that influence ecosystem dynamics and heterogeneity (Van Wilgen et al 2003). However, the interpretation of this influence resulted in managers applying very rigid and fixed regimes, burning areas at the same time of the year and at the same interval. Research has now shown that this have a negative influence on biodiversity by favouring those species with a life cycle better adapted to the specific burning regime. Also, a believe that fires are only good during a certain time of the year also led to some loss in biodiversity. Contemporary ecological thinking emphasizes the importance of disturbance processes in maintaining the composition and structure of savanna ecosystems, and fire is recognised as the most important disturbance process of all.

The Kalahari probably didn't see many anthropogenic fires as the original inhabitants of this land were San people, who were hunter/gatherers and not herdsman, and therefore would have no reason to start veld fires to provide grazing for their livestock. All it would have achieved was to burn away resources, which they could ill afford.

Given the high number of lightning strikes reported for the Kalahari area, it is reasonable to assume that historically fires would have been an important factor in maintaining ecosystem function in the region. It can probably also be safely assumed that in the past there was probably little permanent animal impact on the vegetation of the Kalahari due to a lack of open water, and that fires would have been an important factor in the productivity and stability of the plant communities of the Kalahari in the past, although there were relatively few (Scholes et. al 2002). Dougill and Cox (2003) suggests that the introduction of domestic livestock to the Kalahari has been accompanied by significant changes in the rangeland ecology, reflected most obviously in a shift from herbaceous to woody plant species. The exact mechanisms behind this remain unclear, and it remains uncertain whether the vegetation changes are a direct response to increased grazing pressure, or whether they reflect more fundamental changes in ecosystem function. Observations in some studies suggest that bush encroachment can be explained solely by the interactions between livestock pressure and abiotic environmental conditions, in particular rainfall variability and fire frequency. The significance of the applicability of the fire and herbivory explanations of bush encroachment is, they suggest, that vegetation changes are reversible.

Sources of historical occurrence of fires in the Kalahari system are limited, but Van der Walt and Le Riche (1984) said that fires in 1934, 1968 and 1974/5 were recorded for the southern Kalahari (nowadays Kgalagadi National Park), but that in the northern Kalahari with a rainfall of 500mm+ that fires burn every year. They only occur in large intervals in the semi-arid southern Kalahari (Jeltcsh et al 1997), but their effect is of considerable importance.

It is important to realise that fire in extensive natural settings is so varied under different circumstances, and these specifications sufficiently flexible, as to give management considerable freedom of judgement in implementing the intended achievement of the goals. Indeed, a more rigid programme is likely not to succeed in achieving biodiversity aims. Therefore, understanding the background and intention is crucial and management should not be criticised for consequences which may arise founded on good or even reasonable judgement on their part, in the rare events when unexpected changes of, for instance, weather conditions, lead to large fires. As mentioned this is a learn-by-doing approach, but if implemented correctly can be hugely positive for the conservation of biodiversity on Khamab Kalahari Reserve.

3.8 Rehabilitation programme for degraded areas

As described earlier in the discussion and conclusion of the vegetation description in Point 2.4.4, the degradation on KKR is limited to the widespread killing of trees due to non-selective bush clearing with chemicals (tebuthiuron) by aerial application in the past. This practice occurred over large areas of the reserve, and is still continuing in large areas of the Molopo district today. Unfortunately there is no rehabilitation that can be done that can rehabilitate these areas to what they formerly were. The chemicals need to work itself out of the system over time. Due to the slow growing nature of trees like Acacia erioloba and Boscia albitrunca, it will take a long time for the bush to recover to its natural state, even after all the chemicals have disappeared from the system. However, good veld management practices and prevention of overgrazing will assist the recovery, as stated by Brown & Bezuidenhout (2010).

Some areas of bush encroachment are present on KKR, mostly areas that have been overgrazed in the past and where no chemical bush clearing has been done. If encroachment occurs on areas where non-selective chemical bush clearing have been done in the past, both the woody and herbaceous components tend to become homogenous, resulting in a loss of biodiversity (pers. obs). Also, the bush tends to recover in thick stands of indigenous bush, eventually resulting in a loss of grass. Where the bush becomes encroached in areas that has never been cleared, or selectively cleared, it stills lead do a decrease in the grass layer, however, but the biodiversity in these areas is still high.

Areas of bush encroachment make up a small percentage of the surface area of KKR, and bush clearing is not of prime importance at the moment. The emphasis should rather be on restoring the natural mechanisms and processes that keep the balance between the woody and grass layer.
These processes include the placement of waterholes according to scientific principles (as described earlier in the document), the implementation and use of fire in the system, as well as ensuring an herbivory component that is in balance with its resources. Grazers have an important distal influence on the composition structure and pattern of savannah vegetation, while herbivory by browsers (especially elephant and black rhino) can also have a profound and more proximate influence. The introduction of elephant in the system will therefore assist and play a valuable part in restoring the natural processes that regulate the interactions between the grass and tree components.

The results of the vegetation monitoring programme, as discussed in detail earlier, will determine extent to which the above veld management interventions (herbivory, veld burning) contain and reverse bush encroachment – especially the vigorous coppice that occurs following bush clearing efforts by the previous land owners. Should the monitoring feedback indicate that the fire interventions are not having the desired effect then bush clearing interventions will be considered according to the following guidelines:

- No bush clearing will be done within a 5km radius from permanent water points
- Beyond this radius, bush clearing will focus on the coppice of previously cleared areas i.e. already encroached areas within this zone will be left untouched
- Aerial applications of chemicals will only be considered as a bush clearing technique in very localised areas
- Chopping by hand and spot spraying directly on the plant will be considered as will the use of contractors

3.9 Population management of other wildlife species

As described earlier in Section B in KKR's vision, it is stated the vision of Khamab is to allow the ecological processes to function with as little management intervention as possible. Therefore the management of other wildlife species will be kept to the minimum, as far as possible.

Predator numbers on the reserve are still establishing (some predator species like spotted hyena has not been introduced yet), and have not yet reached levels where they can exert a large enough impact on the prey population to prevent it from growing to levels outside the limits of acceptable change. The ecological management approach with regards to water distribution, fire, herbivory and predation as described above has not been fully realised yet, and it will take some time for all the processes to develop to an extent where they will keep animal populations inside the established limits of acceptable change.

To avoid overgrazing of the veld until predator numbers reach a level where they will start to exert pressure on prey population, large numbers of gemsbok, eland, blue wildebeest and zebra has been sold in 2012, 2013 & 2014, with another removal planned for 2015. These animals are captured through live capture by a game capture operator.

The number of animals that are sold through live capture gets determined after the annual aerial game census, where the whole reserve is counted systematically over a period of 7 days. Also taken into consideration are the known animals that are killed by predators during the year, and extrapolated for the whole predator population. This will be done up to a point where enough data has been collected through monitoring to accurately determine the impact of predators on prey.

The limits of acceptable change (see the discussion in Point 3.10.1 below) will constantly be evaluated based on the outcome of the vegetation monitoring programme. If the impact of the herbivore population is found to cross the lower limits of acceptable change, the population will be reduced and the lower acceptable level adapted to levels as indicated by the monitoring programme.

Predators also fall under the same approach, and the vision of as little management intervention as possible also applies to predators. We know, and information from other game reserves indicate likewise, that predator-prey relationships are complex processes that are not easy to understand, and the balance between predator and prey are not easy to establish. A lot of reserves struggle to find that balance, and are often ham struck with objectives that does not allow them the freedom to let processes continue a little longer in search of the point where the natural control mechanisms start to come to the fore (Millet et al 2013). On KKR the approach would be to only intervene if predation reaches levels where it crosses levels of acceptable change and from which prey populations are unlikely to recover.

3.10 Preferred herbivore density

3.10.1 Carrying Capacity

The concept of 'carrying capacity' is rather nebulous and consequently it has been defined in many ways. An essentially loose definition of the concept in an ecological context is:

"The number of animals that the habitat/vegetation of a given area can safely carry/maintain in the long term without risk of habitat degradation and species extinction"

In a commercial production context a more appropriate definition would be as follows:

"The number of animals that the habitat/vegetation of a given area can carry/maintain in a sustained long term productive state or a state that maximizes long term sustained yields"

In arid areas such as KKR with unpredictable variable rainfall patterns, and hence highly variable vegetation production from season to season, there is no such thing as a static or fixed carrying capacity. Instead the so called carrying capacity in reality is something that fluctuates widely and unpredictably over time. In these circumstances the usefulness of the concept becomes highly questionable with respect to herbivore management decision making for KKR.

Thus, in the context of KKR it is better to manage and make decisions in accordance with a range of so called carrying capacity estimates with upper and lower limits (i.e. limits of acceptable change). In this context carrying capacity estimates have some use at the start-up phase in providing the "pointers" within this range or the "ball park" estimates for placing start up stocking rates within the range. Furthermore, in the absence of any exact science basis for determining this range of estimates the following approaches were adopted in this report (Collinson & Brett, 2007):

- According to the knowledge and experience of local farmers and herbivore ranchers the overall herbivore carrying capacity for the Molopo area is:
  - 1AU/10 ha in good to average rainfall years[1]*
  - Much lower than this for drought years
  - 1AU/20ha if the aim is to adopt a cautious approach that minimizes the risk of die offs in drought years
- The current herbivore stocking rates of the nearby Molopo Game Reserve were then compared with the figures provided above by local farmers and they were found to concur i.e. during the current good rainfall years the total stocking rate has been sustainably maintained at 1AU/12 ha
- More scientific general equations (using average annual rainfall and soil fertility parameters) for estimating carrying capacity provide figures ranging from 1AU/10ha to 1AU/30ha for a mean annual rainfall of 320mm

3.10.2 Limits of Acceptable Change

Footnote: [1] An AU (Animal Unit) is a standard animal with a mass of 454 kg which is used as a standard measure in carrying capacity estimates. Different species with different body masses are then assigned AU equivalent on the basis of this standard e.g. Conventionally in South Africa, carrying capacity has been expressed as the number of hectares required to support an AU (ha/AU or AU/ha). Recently, the use of an AU as a standard measure in the carrying capacity estimates has come under criticism due to the fact that it has several shortcomings. The critics of the use AU as the standard measure recommend biomass (with kg as the unit) as a preferred alternative. Nevertheless, due to its familiarity in the South African context this report has persisted with the AU concept.*

Having established a carrying capacity range and start-up stocking rate guidelines, and in keeping with KKR's vision and mission (allow ecological processes to function with minimal management intervention), herbivore management, after the start-up phase, needs to be conducted as follows:

- The total overall stocking rate of established herbivore species should be allowed to fluctuate between an upper limit of 1AU/10ha and a lower limit of 1AU/30ha
- Apart from rare and/or valuable species, management interventions such as removals, predator control, feeding, veterinary treatment, supplementary introductions etc. should only be undertaken if herbivore populations fluctuate to such an extreme that they increase or decrease outside the range of these limits. (Note that with this approach, some die offs of common species during droughts would need to be tolerated in keeping with the vision/mission)
- For rare and/or valuable species such as black rhino, white rhino, and buffalo a far more hands on management approach would be required. In this respect, intervention including selling off of surplus animals (before food becomes scarce), feeding in times of drought and veterinary treatment would be major challenges for achieving maximum productivity through low mortality and high birth rates.

4 BASE FOR DEVELOPING A LION MANAGEMENT PLAN

4.1 Background to lion management on small reserves

As prelude to the lion management plan, let us look deeper into the typical breakdown of natural population factors that happen in small enclosed reserves.

Naturally lions live in groups or prides in order to defend territories from other groups, or to defend cubs from roaming males and/or males wanting to take over prides (Miller et al 2013). The typical situation on small fenced reserves is that there is often no roaming males, or sometimes no other prides and/or roaming groups. As a result there is no pressure for prides to stay intact, often leading to complete disintegration of pride structures. This in turn affects predator-prey relationships because the impact of several individuals and/or small groups of lions making multiple kills is bigger than the case with more stable prides making less kills, even if the total number of lions on the reserve is similar.

The typical situation on small reserves is that male coalition take-overs are a scarce occurrence, which is the prime reason for cub mortality in natural populations (Miller et al 2013). Pride males often stay with a particular pride for many years, sometimes leading to inbreeding when these males start mating with their daughters, reducing the genetic variability of the population.

Lion populations on small reserves often have a lower age of first breeding, shorter breeding intervals and larger litter sizes than their counterparts in natural populations (Miller & Funston 2014). This is probably partly management induced, but there are also arguments for the theory that because of the absence of roaming males and more prides, there are less social and resource stress in the populations. Increasing social and resource stress results in females loosing body condition, which in turn could affect fecundity. It could lead to females breeding at a later age, as well as less often.

Furthermore, management actions like culling or regular removals as ways of controlling population numbers can have the opposite effect in that it increases population growth rates (Miller et al. 2013). The reason for this is that it does not mimic natural population drivers, but are more similar to removals from a population due to natural disasters. When a population is under pressure from natural disasters, for example recovery after a disease outbreak, it can often respond by increasing its growth rate.

4.2 Objectives of lion management on Khamab Kalahari Reserve

Lion management on Khamab should strive to:

- manage the lion population in such a way that they form part of Khamab's vision by seeing them as an ecological process that should function with as little management intervention as possible
- keep the lion numbers within the levels of acceptable change, allowing for natural fluctuations in population size, and ensuring that they do not reach levels where the prey populations are unable to recover from
- allow natural population regulation mechanisms to play a role in the maintenance of the lion population
- keep the genetic integrity of the population intact
- to ensure that lion population does not grow to levels where the continued existences of endangered predators like wild dog and cheetah are in jeopardy
- minimize the prevalence of diseases in the lion population

- make Khamab a leading role-player in lion conservation community regarding the management of lions on small reserves
- contribute to lion conservation as a whole by participating in a lion meta-population management approach as suggested by the Lion Management Forum ("LiMF")
- minimize lion/human conflict situations

4.3 Principles incorporated in the lion management plan

System based approaches to conservation management include at least one of the following elements: allowing natural processes to play out, restoring ecological processes or mimicking the outcomes of ecological processes.

In line with the Khamab Kalahari Reserve's Vision, Mission and Key objectives, lion management on Khamab should primarily allow natural processes to play themselves out, as far as possible. However, realities and experience on small to medium sized, fenced reserves, have indicated that, although good to aim for, are not viable in practice, and that management intervention needs to be more intense, especially when managing a large carnivore like lion.

Therefore, the management plan must primarily attempt to restore ecological processes that control lion populations. Secondary it should aim to, in conjunction with the restoration, mimic social factors that impact on lion population control, rather than direct management actions based upon carrying capacity approaches.

Keeping in mind the reason for the breakdown of natural processes as described earlier, the natural population control mechanisms that can be restored or mimicked are:

- More prides
- Roaming males
- Coalition take over and infanticide
- Age of first and last breeding
- Litter intervals
- Litter sizes

4.3.1 Restoring ecological processes

In order to allow for natural mechanisms of population control, Khamab should aim to have at least two or three prides on the reserve, and possibly more depending on how the lion population develops. There should then be at least one roaming male coalition per pride to add social pressure on the population. As summarised earlier, increasing social pressure could potentially lead to increase in litter intervals and decrease in litter sizes.

More roaming male coalitions could potentially lead to more regular natural coalition take-overs, and this should be allowed to happen. In case natural take-overs do not occur, due to several factors, this should be mimicked by removing pride males regularly by live removal (providing other reserves with males or swopping males with other reserves) or hunting. Pride males should be allowed to ideally have two (or maximum three breeding cycles) and then be removed, or a natural pride take over should be encouraged by allowing competitor males to come through the ranks or being introduced.

This approach is new in lion conservation and as far as knowledge stretch, has not been implemented on any small fenced reserve in South Africa. Although the theory behind this are sound, the effect of this on a small population is still unknown. This approach therefore needs close monitoring and regular scrutiny with regards to its effectiveness. The potential of this is widely recognised at the Lion Management Forum (LiMF), but because of the practical implications, especially in small reserves, is not that easy implement. The size of Khamab may make it more viable as a management tool than on the majority of other reserves in South Africa.

4.3.2 Mimicking of natural control mechanisms

If results from the above approach do not prove to be successful, ways to mimic the natural population regulation mechanisms can be introduced. This should ideally be done in combination with the above approach, and only under extreme circumstances be introduced as an "exclusive" option.

By carefully incorporating contraceptives as part of a lion management approach, it can fulfil a valuable role in mimicking natural control mechanisms. As described earlier, the age of first breeding, inter-litter intervals and age of last breeding can be controlled with the use of contraceptives. Here they can be used to increase the age of first breeding and increase litter intervals, and reduce the age of last breeding to be more in line with natural patterns as described earlier.

Contraception should be used with care. There have been some negative effects on population dynamics of lions reported when contraception has been used as a management tool for example prides splitting up, lionesses becoming over weight and sometimes unable to come into oestrus again . Although this is based circumstantial evidence on not documented literature, there are enough reports on this to probably have a certain amount of truth to it, even though not documented scientifically. Contraceptives should only be used in a way that will mimic natural population control mechanisms, and should not be used in a blanket approach in the population. In natural populations it is very unlikely that a number of females in a population will be without cubs for extended periods of time and this very unnatural approach should therefore not be induced by the use of contraceptives. However, if contraceptives are used carefully and as part of a well thought out management approach, can be an effective tool in controlling lion population growth. Like with restoring ecological processes, monitoring should be done to test the affectivity of mimicking these factors, as well as picking up any negative consequences of this approach.

Litter sizes could potentially be reduced by a current experimental procedure of unilateral tube tying. This is a surgical procedure where one tube of the uterus of the lioness gets tied or removed, which mean that fewer cubs can be conceived. Some reserves have started to use it, and the effectiveness of this procedure in natural conditions is still unknown, although it worked well in zoo situations. However, it does show some huge promise as a way of reducing population growth rate. Although it invasive and requires surgical intervention which can be expensive, it is a once-off cost, where after there are not regular interventions with the specific lioness, and in the long term probably the better option.

4.4 Management considerations in the management plan

4.4.1 Excess lions and population control

Lion numbers on Khamab should only be reduced if the lion population on Khamab reaches a level where it prevents the reaching of objectives of the reserve as a whole, or the specific objectives of the lion management plan.

However any decisions to reduce or control the population should be made with care and only if it proves that objectives cannot be achieved as a result of a larger lion population.

Several options are available for population control of the lion population: live removals to other reserves, hunting of specific individuals, culling (euthanasia) and contraception.

a. The options to remove live animals for introduction to other reserves have decreased dramatically of the past few years. The majority of reserves in South Africa belief that their lion populations are too large, and are looking for translocation opportunities. There is an oversupply of free-roaming lions from game reserves, so finding an outlet for lions for translocation will not be easy. However, this should be the preferred method if young animals need to be removed, and should be attempted first before other options are considered.

   If males in their prime need to be removed for genetic purposes (see below), they should be considered for swopping for other males (see below) from other suitable and credible reserves.

b. If specific adult individuals needs to be removed for whatever reason, and it is impossible to remove them alive, they should be considered for hunting. However, individuals that are part of a stable pride should not be hunted while in the presence of the pride. Hunting should only be applied as a simulation of a natural population process, and not as a means of generating income.

   Old males that have reached the end of their lives can be considered for hunting. Males in their prime can also be considered for hunting if there is no need to introduce new genes by swopping with other reserves (see above), or if there are no other reserves that form part of LiMF (see below) who are looking for lions for introduction.

   In small populations there are often single lionesses with a tendency to move off and spend most of their time on their own. Although un-documented, previous experience indicates that the offspring from such lioness show similar tendencies later in life. These animals are often shy, don't get seen often, and therefore don't contribute much to the game viewing experience. However, they add considerably to predation impact. In order to promote pride structures once the population and prides have established, these animals should be removed, preferably alive by translocation to other reserves. This strategy should be monitored for its effectiveness, and will hopefully contribute to more stable pride structures.

c. Euthanasia (culling) can be used in exceptional circumstances if the above options have been explored and if no alternative solutions can be found. However, because of the controversial perceptions of euthanasia, it should be done with the utmost care. Animals should not be euthanized in the presence of other individuals that are not earmarked for euthanasia. The best method of euthanasia is to first dart and immobilize all animals earmarked for euthanasia, remove them from the area, and then to kill them while they are asleep.

   Euthanasia of cubs is both a very sensitive topic, as well as hard on the person that needs to do it. In natural lion populations, low survival rate of cubs is one of the prime natural population control processes that appear to break down in small, fenced lion populations. In terms of simulating natural control mechanisms, euthanasia of cubs could be a good way of achieving the objective.

However, as with other euthanasia described above, this should not be done in presence of the mother or other pride members. Furthermore, not all the cubs from a littler should be euthanized. By leaving at least one cub, it will prevent the lioness from going into estrus immediately.
As mentioned, the euthanasia of cubs is extremely controversial, and should be debated openly and honestly by the Khamab management team.

d. Euthanasia should not be adopted as a rule as a quick fix, but underlying problems that cause over-population should be addressed as far as possible.

e. The use of contraceptives to control population numbers has been described in more detail earlier. Contraceptives should be used with care in a well thought out management approach.

4.4.2 Genetic integrity

In open systems genetic integrity is ensured through normal social behavior of lions, but these mechanisms often gets broken down in small populations. As a result some reserves with small lions populations face inbreeding issues, which is often amplified by management actions like euthanasia, contraception etc. However, by mimicking natural control mechanism and social behavior as described above, inbreeding problems are unlikely to occur on Khamab. However, whenever a lion needs to be darted for the first time for whatever reason, genetic samples should be taken and send for analysis to continuously monitor the genetic integrity of the population. If test results show indications of continuous decrease in genetic variability and integrity, serious steps to introduce new genetic material should be made as soon as possible. This can largely be achieved by participation in a meta-population management approach as described later in this document.

4.4.3 Disease and general health

Diseases play important roles in the functioning of natural systems, whether it is to control population numbers or maintenance of genetic diversity. It is therefore often important in natural systems that diseases dynamics play out in order to increase ecological heterogeneity. However, in small and/or fenced populations, it is important that managers think through the potential impacts of diseases carefully. Some diseases can severely deplete or in some cases completely exterminate a small population. And in a fenced reserve as an " island" there is no opportunity for natural re-colonization of the population. The establishment of the populations often came with lots of effort and financial implications, and it would therefore be ill advised to let certain diseases play itself out.

However, it also doesn't make sense to contracept or euthanize lions to prevent the population from getting too large, and then on the other hand also vaccinate to protect lions from diseases.

To not remove the important role that diseases play in the functioning of the system completely, it will therefor make sense to vaccinate core individuals only. This will allow diseases to still play a role in controlling the population, but will prevent the complete removal of the whole population as a result of the disease. However, vaccination should not be seen as a must do, and it is up to KKR management to decide on the necessity of vaccination.

Key diseases of lions to look out for are canine distemper virus (CDV), bovine tuberculosis (BTB), rabies and feline immunodeficiency (FIV). Some of these diseases has the potential to kill a large percentage or exterminate the population, and should be avoided where possible. Furthermore, some of the diseases like BTB and rabies has the potential to spread into other animal populations as well, and should therefore be avoided. FIV seems to be present in most lion populations, and should not be a serious concern, but should be monitored.

Whenever lions get darted for whatever reason, blood samples should be taken and analyzed for these diseases if possible. The skin test for BTB has not been perfected for predators, and need boma time and follow up tests. It should not be a concern unless new animals are brought in from the Lowveld or KZN regions.

However, diseases that affect single animals and with a low probability to spread in the population should not be a concern. If animals do get infected by some means, they should not be treated unless it is an animal that has value for a particular reason, for example a new introduction for genetic reasons.

Similar rules should be used for injuries etc., even if it is life threatening. If it is an animal that doesn't have a high genetic value, or high potential economic value, these animals should be allowed to either die naturally as a result from the injury, or to recover naturally on its own. Lions have a remarkable ability to recover from what we as humans see as serious injuries, and even broken legs etc. have the ability to recover well. Managers often over-react to injuries on lions, but each case should be evaluated on its own merits.

4.4.4 Conflict with other predators

It is known that lion can have a large impact on con-specific predators, in specific wild dogs, cheetahs and brown hyena. However, some of the other smaller predators are also killed by lions, although unlikely to such an extent that it will threaten the existence of the small predators.
It was reported in some reserves that the populations of wild dog and cheetah were virtually killed to extinction on some reserves by lions, while on others the impact appears to be less severe.

However, both these species also have the ability to increase in numbers quickly, and as a result can have a high impact on the prey populations on a reserve. Lions serve as an important population control mechanism in natural systems.

Therefore, it must be accepted that lions will kill a significant number of other predators, and this must be allowed without interference. However, the status of small predators needs to be monitored closely, particularly for impact of lion killings on the population. Cheetah and wild dog are more endangered than lion, and therefore should have a higher conservation status on the reserve than lions. Khamab should aim to contribute to the conservation of both these species by providing excess animals for relocation to other reserves.

Only if it appears that the lion population will cause local extinction of any of the smaller predators should it be a concern, and should measures be implemented to combat this.

4.4.5 Effect on biodiversity/prey populations

In natural populations lions regulate the number of prey in most savannas systems. However, in small and fenced situations they are known to negatively affect prey populations, and this influence gets magnified on reserves where large scale hunting or continuous live removals for sale take place. Models have shown that increased numbers of predation in combination with regular harvesting can drive fenced prey populations to extinction. However, the same effect is also witnessed on reserves where hunting and live removals are not a regular occurrence, the difference is that it takes place over a longer period. Without careful monitoring and sometimes regulation of large predator numbers, ungulate populations can decline more rapidly than managers expect.

However, the effect of waterhole distribution on the predator-prey relationships on small fenced reserves has not been tested. The limited waterholes on Khamab might or might-not influence the potential impact of the lion population on the prey population, as well as on other predators like cheetah and wild dog. There is the potential that the predator-prey relationships on Khamab might be more balanced in comparison with other much smaller fenced reserves, taking into account both the size and limited water distribution on Khamab. Therefore, Khamab management should not over-react when the lion population increases rapidly initially, and appears to start having an impact on the prey population. Natural ecological balances takes time to develop, and likewise might take time for the growth rate of the lion population to respond to the impact on prey population numbers.

The impact of the lions on the prey should continuously be monitored and modeled in order to get a good understanding of the predator-prey dynamics. This should also indicate if some sort of equilibrium between the predators and prey are possible in the context of water distribution, or if the pattern on Khamab will follow what is seen elsewhere on other fenced reserves.

As a starting threshold of potential concern (TPC) for the prey population, if a 15% decrease in the prey population can be attributed to high numbers of lion

4.4.6 Meta-population management

The major reason for the introduction of lions in fenced reserves is by far majority done for tourism purposes, rather than ecological reasons. Most small lion populations get micromanaged and in isolation from other populations, which has the net effect of reducing the conservation values of these small lion populations on a regional scale. This prompted an initiative by several private and government management agencies as well as biologists dealing with lion management, to form the Lion Management Forum (LiMF), with the purpose of enhancing the conservation status of lion population on small fenced reserves. It also attempts to find solutions to lion management issues and challenges on fenced reserves.

Part of this strategy is to group small lion populations on fenced reserves together to form a larger lion meta-population. The idea is to have regular movement of lions between the different meta-population reserves by swopping of animals from time to time, and to work together to mimic a much larger natural lion population. All reserves will still have its own management objectives and measures, but by having regular contact and assisting each other by creating opportunities for movement of animals, will prevent micromanagement of the populations, and in that way increase the conservation value of each small population.

Khamab was one of the founding members of LiMF, and should continue to participate in this initiative. In this way it can achieve several of the objectives of the reserve as a whole, as well as the vision of keeping a lion population as described earlier.

4.4.7 Human conflicts and compensation

Conflict between humans and lions (and all other predators) should be avoided at all costs. This implies keeping the electrified boundary fence in perfect condition to minimize the risk of escaping to almost zero. However, even if the fence is in perfect condition, the chance of a large predator escaping are always present, and in the case of a large predator escaping, Khamab management should react immediately to either capture the animal and return it back to the reserve, or destroy it if no alternative is available, and/or the escaped animal poses danger to the life a human outside the fence.

In case the escaped animal causes damage outside the reserve if it escapes, Khamab should have a compensation policy to repay damages to the affected parties. Whether this compensation policy is covered by insurance, or from allocated budget funds are to the discretion of the management team. However, they need to ensure the public liability etc. is in place in case the escaped animal causes the death of a human being.

In order to ensure the continues respect that the large predators have for the electrified fencing, it should be ensured that all fences on Khamab to which predators have access to, be electrified and in good condition. This include fences around camps, houses etc. The reasoning behind this is that animals will increasingly test fence lines in attempts to escape if they regularly come into contact with fences without electricity or electrified fences that are not working properly.

The first line of preventing predator/human conflict situations is a proper working boundary fence line.

In the case of an animal escaping the reserve, but gets captured and returned to the reserve, such an animal should only be giving one chance. The next time it escapes again (except in exceptional circumstances which is not the fault of the escaping animal), the animal should be destroyed as soon as possible to avoid escaping turning learned behavior.

Khamab should develop a policy for the compensation of neighbors in the case of any large predator escaping the reserve and causing damage on neighboring properties, as well as for liability in the possibility of a human being killed by an animal that has escaped from the reserve.

4.5 Monitoring

The effectiveness of this management approach will depend on a detailed monitoring program. An adaptive management route should be followed to make this management approach work. For the success of any adaptive management approach information the outcomes of decisions are very important in order to feed back in future decision making processes. Therefore, to get a good understanding of the outcome of decisions in this regard, a stringent and detailed monitoring program is critical. This monitoring program needs to be permanent and ongoing. Lions as apex predators are important drivers in the ecosystem and can have top-down effects on ecosystem processes.

5. DETAILED ADAPTIVE LION MANAGEMENT APPROACH FOR KHAMAB KALAHARI RESERVE

As described earlier, the lion management plan on Khamab is based on two strategies.

Strategy 1 focusses on the restoration of ecological processes, while Strategy 2 involves the mimicking of natural control mechanisms that regulate lion populations.

The core of the lion management plan is based on the flow diagram (Appendix 3) which serves as decision making process on which management decisions can be based, and is very important in understanding the management process as described below.

5.1 Strategy 1 (Restoring ecological processes)

Strategy 1 should be the preferred (primary) management strategy to start off lion management on Khamab. As mentioned earlier, it is still untested, and therefore need to be monitored closely before decisions on its effectiveness can be made. Should it proof effective, it should remain the primary management strategy for managing lions on Khamab.

This strategy entails the following:

- Establish at least 2 prides on Khamab
- Establish at least 3 bachelor male coalitions
- Allow 2 or max 3 breeding cycles for pride males
- Remove pride males by live removal (preferable) or hunting (if no translocation options are available). Timing of removal will be important (try to remove when there are very young cubs or pregnant females pregnant). This should open opportunities for infanticide.
- Allow a young coalition to take over.
- Replace the coalition that took over with new, young coalition (either from outside of Khamab if new genes are needed or from within Khamab population).

Female dispersal groups should be allowed to establish prides to test for the increase in social pressure on the population. Khamab can potentially accommodate 3-5 prides based on home range size and available habitat.

Once fairly stable prides are established, lionesses that become loners should be removed, preferably by live removal.

Male coalitions should be restricted to maximum of one for each pride. Extra male coalitions should be removed by live removal (preferable) or hunting (if no translocation options are available) if they are old enough.

Pride sizes are not important and should self-regulate. However, if large prides leads to a significant increases in predation on large herbivores like rhino or buffalo, this strategy should be re-evaluated.

5.1.1 Monitoring

Monitor the outcome of Strategy 1, in particular population growth (inter-litter intervals, age of first breeding, cub survival).

Monitor the effects of these actions on the lion population growth and social structures.

Continuously monitor the effects of the lion population and the different management approaches on the prey populations.

Closely monitor impact on prey population, and use in predator-prey models to determine the effect of different management options on the predator-prey relationships.

If a decrease in prey populations can be attributed to lion predation (decrease of 20% of prey population), find the reason/s for this:

- Is the lion population to big?
- Are there too many prides?
- Are the prides to large?
- Too many single animals or bachelor groups?
- Is it related to environmental factors like water distribution?
- Is it a combination of the some of the above factors?

These can be answered with the use of models, using data from a monitoring program.

If the conclusion to above questions is that the lion population is too big, find the reason for why it is too big, and what can be done to remedy it.

- Is Strategy 1 not working, or not working well enough?
- Can Strategy 1 be adapted to make it work better?
- Should Strategy 2 be combined with Strategy 1 to make it more effective?

5.2 Strategy 2 (Mimicking natural control mechanisms)

Strategy 2 can be followed in case Strategy 1 does not prove successful. However, it should be kept in mind that the restoration of ecological processes will take time, and the natural drivers that are attempting to be restored with Strategy 1, need to be given ample time to start being effective.

However, should monitoring indicate that Strategy 1 does not lead to the desired results, Strategy 2 can be incorporated, and should ideally be combined with Strategy 1. Only in extreme cases should Strategy 2 be used on its own.

Strategy 2 involves mimicking natural control mechanisms that control lion populations

If a large lion population is responsible for decrease in prey numbers, the population needs to be reduced. Mimicking natural population control is important in this instance.

The best way to reduce impact on prey is to remove small dispersal groups, or a whole pride. In such a case the whole group or pride should be removed and no individuals left behind. This mimics normal dispersal or immigration and should not impact the surviving groups much.

The best option for removing a whole group is through live removals and relocation. However, options for relocation are becoming increasingly rare, and if it is a small group of only two animals they can be removed by hunting, alternatively if it is a larger group with young animals should be euthanized.

If this becomes a regular occurrence, other measures to reduce population growth should be implemented, but again should be focused on mimicking natural mechanisms.

- Unilateral tube tying to mimic decrease in litter sizes, but also mimic reduced cub survival into adulthood.
- Cub survival can be mimicked by euthanasia of cubs.
- Using once off contraception on young lionesses to increase age of first breeding.
- Using contraception on old lionesses to reduce age of last breeding
- Using single contraception in between litter to increase inter litter interval.

Of the above options, unilateral tube tying shows the most promise, and information should become available with regards to its effectiveness as more and more reserves are starting to use it as a management option.

B. Introduction

The markhor Capra falconeri is a near-threatened wild goat species in the subfamily of Caprinae. Its geographic range includes southern Tajikistan, northeastern Afghanistan, southwestern Turkmenistan, northern India, northern and central Pakistan and southern Uzbekistan (Grubb 2005). The Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora (CITES) lists this species in Appendix I, which includes species threatened to extinction (CITES Appendix I). In The IUCN (International Union for Conservation of Nature) Red List of Threatened Species™ the markhor was listed as "endangered" from 1994 till 2015. Due to international conservation success on the recovery of the population in protected areas and areas with sustainable hunting management, the global population has grown substantially during the last decades and the species could be down listed from "Endangered" (EN) to "near threatened" (NT) (Michel and Rosen 2015).

The Republic of Tajikistan is the most important range state of the subspecies Heptner's markhor Capra falconeri heptneri (also known as Bukharan or Tajik markhor). Tajikistan and its local communities are key players in the ongoing process of conserving the markhor, and the growing population size substantially contributed to the positive global trend reflected in the improved IUCN Red List status. This positive development and the outstanding work of the Committee on Environmental Protection under the Government of Tajikistan in collaboration with other agencies, national and international scientific and non-governmental organizations and especially the local communities of the markhor range in Darvaz and Shamsiddin Shohin (former Shuroabad) districts have been recognized by various scientific and management authorities in the international conservation community. As a result, the Tajik community-based conservancies, which play an important role in the recovery of the markhor, are mentioned as an exemplary case study in "Informing decisions on trophy hunting – A Briefing Paper for European Union Decision-makers regarding potential plans for restriction of imports of hunting trophies" (IUCN 2016).

A significant tool in the conservation of the species is the community-based trophy hunting, since old markhor males are highly valuable in the worldwide trophy hunting business.

Considering that large parts of the society and political decision-makers mainly in the European Union and the United States of America refuse trophy hunting and hunting in general, it is more important than ever to promote the "IUCN SSC (Species Survival Commission) Guiding Principles on Trophy Hunting as a Tool for Creating Conservation Incentives" (IUCN 2012) to ensure the legitimacy of sustainable trophy hunting as a component in conservation programs. Key principles in this guideline are "Biological Sustainability" in the meaning that trophy hunting does not affect the population in a negative way (e.g. population decline, artificial selection, poaching, etc.) and "Net Conservation Benefit" like creating incentives to conserve the species by producing revenues or employment for local communities living with wildlife. Moreover the IUCN promotes trophy hunting when there is a "Socio-Economic-Cultural Benefit" where trophy hunting respects the needs and values of the local communities and is accepted and co-managed by them. A further principle is "Adaptive Management: Planning, Monitoring, and Reporting". This principle includes ways of assessing and managing the resource adaptively. This includes animal counts, trophy quotas, hunting plans and a monitoring of the trophy hunting. The last principle is "Accountable and Effective Governance" which should provide transparency how decisions are made; revenues are distributed to local communities and steps taken to wipe out corruption. Obeying these guideline will also ensure the acceptance of trophy hunting of Heptner's markhor by CITES organs, national CITES authorities of importing countries and the United States Fish and Wildlife Service (USFWS), which regulate the export and import of trophies.

To assess the population status of Heptner's markhor in Tajikistan, the Committee on Environmental Protection under the Government of the Republic of Tajikistan organized a range-wide survey which took place from the 13th February till 6th March 2017. The results of this survey are used to determine and allocate the trophy hunting quotas for the hunting season of 2017/2018 and will be suggested at the CITES CoP19 as quotas for the next 5 years. In accordance to the Resolution of the "International Round Table on Sustainable Use and Conservation of Wildlife in Tajikistan (2-3 November 2016, Dushanbe-Tajikistan), Khairullo Ibodzoda, Chairman of the Committee on Environmental Protection under the Government of Tajikistan, invited the IUCN SSC Caprinae Specialist Group as an international observer and organization being recognized as impartial science-based agency, to participate in this year's survey.

C. Survey Methods

C.1. Study area

The survey took place in the known markhor distribution range located in the Darvaz and Shamsiddin Shohin (former Shuroabad) districts. It covers the areas of six conservancies managed by the following legal entities: LLC Morkhur, LLC Saidi Tagnob (collaborating with LLC M-Bukhori, the owner of which, Nurali Latipov, manages one section), LLC Safari Dashtijum, NGO Muhofiz, LLC M-Sayod and LLC Bars, Dashtijum Strictly Protected Area (Zapovednik Dashtijum) and few adjacent parts of local forestry enterprises, not assigned to hunting management entities. The range area of markhor has a size of about 1,177 km² and includes the south-western edge of the Darvaz mountain range, the mid part and the southern edge of the Hazratishoh range and the mountains east of Parvor village.

The survey teams were not able to survey the area east and south of Parvor village as locals and especially the border police informed us that during the time of the survey the risk of landmines and Afghan intruders was too high and heavy snow made access to these areas more difficult. For these reasons the survey team decided it would be neither responsible nor effective to continue the survey in the southern parts of the mountains east of Parvor village, reportedly assigned to NGO Muhofiz and LLC Bars. Similarly Dashtijum Strictly Protected Area could not be surveyed, except a minor section of 30 km² in the south-western part bordering the area managed by LLC Morkhur.

The altitude in the survey area ranges from 600 m in the south-west at the Panj River, which forms the border between Tajikistan and Afghanistan, to 4,573 m at Kuhifrush peak in the north (Darvaz district). In the lower parts open woodland and shrub communities with pistachio (Pistacia vera), redbud (Cercis griffithii) and other shrubs, among them pomegranate (Punica granatum) and almond (Amygdalus bucharica), Artemisia spp. and umbelliferous plants (Prangos pabularia, Ferula spp.) and a large number herbaceous and grass species form the vegetation cover. In higher altitude juniper (Juniperus seravschanica, Juniperus semiglobosa) occurs in scattered stands, mixed with shrubs of maple (Acer regelii, Acer turkestanicum), rose (Rosa kokanica) and honeysuckle (Lonicera nummulariifolia and Cotoneaster spp.).

During the survey, the weather was mild with some precipitation and fog occurring occasionally. Temperatures below 0°C were noted in early morning hours and shady canyons. Local people are agro-pastoralists and own small numbers of livestock (goats, sheep and cattle).

C.2. Survey process

Upon arrival the three international survey participants on behalf of the IUCN SSC Caprinae Specialist Group and the Wild Sheep Foundation had a meeting with Mr. Nematullo Safarov (Research Laboratory for Nature Protection; National Center for Biodiversity and Biosafety), Mr. Rustam Muratov (Institute for Zoology and Parasitology of the Academy of Sciences), Mr. Alikhon Latifi (Association of Hunters of Tajikistan) and Mr. Karakul Sohibkulov (LLC Bars). We had a discussion about the survey method we planned to use and different other approaches to count animals like air flight survey and the SMART patrol system. Since we wanted to keep the results as comparable as possible with results from previous years, we decided to retain the standard method for counting Caprinae which is explained below.

The survey data sheets implied different topics:

General information:

- Name of survey (area, month, year)

- Vegetation (Forest, Woodland, Shrub vegetation, Tall herbs, Meadows, Dry steppe, Semi-shrubs, (Almost) bare)

The survey was carried out in three groups. In the teams participated people from the Department on State Control for Protection of Fauna and Flora Fauna of the Committee for Environmental Protection under the Government of Tajikistan, the Institute of Zoology and Parasitology of the Academy of Sciences, the Pamir Biological Institute of the Academy of Sciences, the Forest Agency under the Government of the Republic of Tajikistan, the Institute of Forestry and the NGO Panthera. Mr. Tino Broghammer (Germany), Mr. Clemens Herche (Germany), both on behalf of Prof. Sandro Lovari (Chairman of the IUCN SSC Caprinae Specialist Group), and Mr. Blake Vandenberg (USA) on behalf of the Wild Sheep Foundation participated as international, independent observers at the invitation of Khairullo Ibodzoda,

Chairman of the Committee on Environmental Protection under the Government of Tajikistan. Each group had at least one international observer, one scientist from the Academy of Sciences and one local ranger. The teams recorded data in the following conservancies:

- LLC Morkhur: 13/02/2017 - 17/02/2017
- LLC Saidi Tagnob: 19/02/2017 - 21/02/2017
- LLC Safari Dashtijum: 23/02/2017 - 24/02/2017
- LLC Saidi Tagnob (Nur): 25/02/2017 - 26/02/2017
- NGO Muhofiz: 27/02/2017 and 06/03/2017
- LLC M-Sayod: 28/02/2017 - 05/03/2017
- LLC Bars 06/03/2017

The time spent in a specific territory of a LLC or NGO was scheduled by Tajik scientists as agreed with the conservancy managers. Observation points were selected by conservancy managers and local rangers to get the best possible view over the markhor home-ranges. The survey aimed at providing a minimum count of markhor present in the surveyed areas. Hence, the three groups were distributed in a manner to get the largest area coverage of each management unit without causing too many faulty repeated records. All survey teams were equipped with a data sheet book, a GPS navigation device (Garmin), a spotting scope (Meopta 20 – 60 x 65) and binoculars with a magnification factor of 8 or 10 and a 42 or 50 mm objective diameter (different brands). We calibrated the compass of the GPS navigation devices every morning before data collection.

Markhor flocks were mainly spotted by local rangers who know the place well. In case we were aware of the risk that another observer group could have seen the same flock, we called each other if possible via mobile phone to discuss our observation event. For every spotted animal group or sign of presence (markhor or any other species) we marked a waypoint in the GPS navigation device and noted the given waypoint number, time, observer elevation, observer longitude and latitude in our data sheet. Within an observer group we shared the different tasks. The most experienced observer identified the animals by sex and age, the rest of the group discussed and corrected the results if necessary. It was compulsory to take photos of trophy age males together with a photo of the current waypoint on the GPS navigation device screen. We estimated and discussed the actual weather, visibility, distance and vertical angle to the observed animals. We used topographic maps to optimize our distance estimate. The azimuth was determined by adjusting the GPS navigation device to the spotting scope direction. Furthermore we recorded the behavior of the animals and information about the habitat (see list above) in which they were observed.

If possible, we discussed all recorded data with all three groups at the end of each survey day or at least within a week. With the help of topographic maps and GPS navigation device we estimated the positions of the markhor flocks and marked them on a map. Obvious double observations were deleted immediately in consultation with all present scientists. The observer group that counted more animals in the repeatedly observed flock kept the waypoint; missed animals were added if necessary. We transferred all data into an Excel spreadsheet for further data analysis.

After finishing the survey Clemens Herche and Tino Broghammer were invited by Mr. Khairullo Ibodzoda, Chairman of the Committee on Environmental Protection under the Government of Tajikistan, to talk about the survey and further plans of the Committee for conserving the wildlife of Tajikistan. Mr. Alikhon Latifi, Mr. Rustam Muratov, Mr. Nematullo Safarov, Mr. Abdulkodirkhon Maskaev (Head of the Department on State Control for Protection of Fauna and Flora of the Committee for Environmental Protection under the Government of Tajikistan), Mr. Ayub Mulloyorov (LLC M-Sayod) and Mrs. Tanya Rosen (NGO Panthera) also participated in this meeting.

All observer waypoints and computed locations of recorded flocks were inserted in a Graphical Information System (GIS QuantumGIS and ArcGIS 10.2). We digitized simplified viewsheds based on observer waypoints and topography. Obviously wrong distances and azimuths of animal records were corrected. We then used the GIS for another check for possible repeated records and after discussing with other team members excluded all detected double observations from the animal count to determine the minimum absolute numbers of markhor in the surveyed areas and calculated the density of markhor in relation to the size of the viewshed in the respective areas. With the assistance of the GIS we created a point map of recorded markhor groups and computed kernel densities of total numbers per record provided in the results section. We discussed pictures of trophy age males and excluded falsely identified trophy age males from the count of this class. The results were discussed with members of the IUCN SSC Caprinae Specialist Group.

D. Results

D.1. Overall numbers and population density at the survey sites

Under exclusion of double counts of same markhor flocks, our final analysis results in an overall number of 1901 markhor observed in a survey area of 552 km². This number is composed of 428 kids, 323 yearlings, 522 females, 179 subadult males (2-3 years), 322 adult males (older than 3 years) and 63 unidentified animals. The number of adult males includes 81 trophy age males of 8 years or older. We counted the highest number of markhor in the territories of LLC Saidi Tagnob (738 markhor; 38.8% of the population (Table 1; Fig. 1)); the highest number of adult males we counted was in LLC M-Sayod with 137 adult males including 45 trophy age males (Table 1).

In total 275 markhor flocks have been registered. Hence, the average markhor group size is 6.9 (SD: ± 6.1). The most common group size was 4 animals per group; the largest counted group consisted of 57 markhor and was recorded in the territory of LLC M-Sayod downstream of Zighar village (Fig. 2).

D.2. Sex and age composition of the markhor population

The composition of sex and age of the determined animals excluding the number of unidentified markhor was 26.2% kids, 17.6% yearlings, 28.4% females, 9.7% subadult males and 18.1% adult males (n = 1838; Fig. 3).

The population density in the surveyed areas ranges from 0.8 markhor per km² (100 ha) in Zap Dashtijum to 6.6 markhor per km² in M-Sayod, downstream of Zighar village. Upstream of Zighar village the density is just 1.3 markhor per km². The overall average density for all surveyed areas is 3.4 markhor per km² (Table 1).

E. Discussion

E.1. Survey method

The method we used in the survey is well established and has been used during the last surveys from 2009 to 2016. In our opinion, conducting the survey in early spring (end of February - March) is adequate for several reasons. Firstly, the survey was implemented in this time of the year for several years. To keep data comparable and assess the population growth, the time of the survey needs to be always the same. Because of following the first green herbs, grasses and opening buds markhor concentrate in lower elevations, which makes them easier observable than during other seasons. Furthermore, markhor do not move a lot during this time of the year which minimizes the risk of double counts (Parrini et al. 2003). On top of that, weak animals and kids, which had not survived the winter, do not get counted. Despite the generally positive assessment of the method, there appeared some issues, which need to be optimized in future surveys.

The time of all GPS navigation devices, cameras and mobile phones should be set to manual to prevent an automatical time change to Afghan time. This prevents possible mistakes and simplifies the analysis of trophy pictures. Furthermore, the focus of cameras should be checked and tripods should be used for cameras to ensure sharp photos. The photographer should also make sure to have enough memory space on the memory card and a sufficient battery status. The purchase of phone adapters for digiscoping with mobile phone cameras through spotting scopes should be considered. This would have the advantage to carry just one tripod for the spotting scope and receive pictures with a better quality which can be used for analysis, discussion within and between observer groups and marketing.

The survey method is well known by the scientists who worked with the GIZ wildlife management project and the NGO Panthera, including Nuhzar Oshurmamadov and Komiljon Saidov from the Academy of Sciences. Especially the scientists from Panthera imparted their knowledge to participants that were less familiar with the survey method. A brief method training with all participants before starting to record data would upgrade the survey significantly. This could also strengthen the motivation of unexperienced experts from national agencies to improve their skills in identifying age and sex of markhor.

The rangers and heads of LLC Morkhur, LLC Safari Dashtijum, LLC Saidi Tagnob (section managed by Nurali Latifov and his team) and LLC M-Sayod were highly motivated to show as many animals and trophy age males as possible. Double counts and over-aging adult males was the result. Overlap of surveyed areas between survey teams and repeated coverage during different days should be avoided, as it increases the risk to detect repeated records. Time efficiency was also influenced by the fact that in LLC Morkhur, LLC Safari Dashtijum and LLC Saidi Tagnob (section managed by Nurali Latipov and his team) survey teams stayed longer than necessary and some valleys were observed by all three survey teams, while one or two observer groups would have been more efficient. To prevent these methodical mistakes in the future, fixed viewing points with defined observation times and adaptation of observer group numbers are recommended to be optimized.

If time and availability of survey teams allows the coverage of survey areas by more than one team, the double-observer method (Suryawanshi et al. 2012) would provide a good opportunity to estimate detectability of markhor flocks, such allowing to assess the population size under consideration of undetected animals. Two approaches are possible. Approach 1: One survey team follows the first survey team with a time lag of 30 minutes. Both teams count animals on fixed observation points with set times. Approach 2: Two survey teams search and count animals parallel with some spatial distance between them to avoid influence from the other group. Approach 1 is applicable when animals can be recorded along a transect. An exemplary conservancy for approach 1 is LLC M-Sayod. There is a potential risk in approach 1 that the first group startles the animals which leads to a decreased detectability for the second survey team. Approach 2 is considerable more applicable in the other conservancies where animals need to be recorded from the top of the counter slope to gain the best possible view.

Over- and underestimation of distances from survey teams to animals became visible in GIS. The individual experience of distance determination varied between the participants. The mentioned method training can equalize distance determinations within the groups.

To exclude repeated records, which cannot be detected in the very important daily discussions between groups, the use of GIS for post-survey analysis is the best possible tool. The position of markhor flocks observed by different groups can be made visible on a virtual map. Very close markhor flocks, for example, can be checked in the database and in case the age and sex structure is identical, one markhor flock gets excluded from the database as it is a double count.

E.2. Area coverage

The survey was exceptionally well organized by Tajik officials, hunting area managers and scientists. Upcoming personnel or weather-related issues were solved diplomatically. As the results show, we could observe a population growth of Heptner's markhor compared to the data from the previous surveys. This growth is owed to the management of certain conservancies, which are on the right track to get excellent. In this case, LLC M-Sayod should serve as a prime example for other conservancies. It was recognized that local rangers especially coming from the conservancies LLC Morkhur, LLC Saidi Tagnob and LLC M-Sayod feel accountable for their areas and give their best to prevent poaching. According to conservancy managers and other locals, poaching is already be minimized in these territories.

The surveyed study area represents almost half of the known distribution of Heptner's markhor in Tajikistan and includes most of the prime habitat of the species. As mentioned before, it was impossible for us to access the markhor areas south-east of Parvor village and most of Dashtijum Strictly Protected Area due to the high risk of landmines, Afghan intruders and heavy snow. In a personal conversation, Mr Sayfiddin Sayfuloev (Leader of NGO Muhofiz) explained that there is not much information known about the possible numbers of markhor in their territory southeast of Parvor village. Furthermore, various locals confirmed in private conversations that the markhor population in these areas belonging to NGO Muhofiz and LLC Bars is negligible. On the other hand, we assume that despite the comparably low density of markhor found by us in Dashtijum Strictly Protected Area an unknown, but possibly substantial number of markhor could inhabit the not surveyed sections of this protected area (212 km² in total, about 30 km² surveyed).

E.3. Population trend of Heptner's markhor in Tajikistan

We conclude that the recorded numbers of markhor represent the minimum absolute population size and indicate the population growth of Heptner's markhor in Tajikistan. However, it must be said that despite careful screening still undetected repeated counts cannot entirely be excluded and may cause an overestimation of our markhor count, which could lead to rushed management decisions. This would pose a great danger for a threatened species like the Heptner's markhor.

In comparison to 2012 (Michel et al. 2015), 2014 (Forest Agency under the Government of the Republic of Tajikistan 2014) and 2016 (Academy of Sciences of the Republic of Tajikistan 2016) the minimum absolute population size is higher (Fig. 5). This can be explained by an actual population growth and the fact that a larger area was surveyed in 2017 (522 km^2 in comparison to 381 km^2 in 2016).

The average population density assessed in 2017 (3.4 markhor per km^2) is higher than in 2012 (2.84 markhor per km^2) and 2014 (2.32 markhor per km^2) but a bit lower than in 2016 (3.7 markhor per km^2) explained by inclusion of areas with lower markhor numbers and not covered in the 2016 survey. We found the highest density of Heptner's markhor downstream of Zighar village with 6.6 markhor per km^2 (LLC M-Sayod). Upstream of Zighar village the density was just 1.3 markhor per km^2 (LLC M-Sayod). In consideration of the circumstances that the competition for resources in this, by markhor newly populated, area is high due to massive fire wood cutting and grazing of livestock the result is pretty good.

The lowest densities was recorded in Zapovednik Dashtijum (0.8 markhor per km^2) and LLC Safari Dashtijum (1.8 markhor per km^2). The low density in Zapovednik Dashtijum could be related to past (and possibly still ongoing) poaching by Afghan intruders, the poor density in LLC Safari Dashtijum reflects the performance of the management in this territory which remains below its full potential. The surveyed area of LLC Bars is too small to draw conclusions from the density (2.6 markhor per km^2) and should be assessed together with the surveyed area of NGO Muhofiz. Considering that the surveyed area of NGO Muhofiz has a comparable habitat to the immediately adjacent downstream parts of LLC M-Sayod, the density of 2.9 markhor per km^2 stays far below its capacity. In LLC Morkhur we surveyed many areas with less suitable habitat for markhor. This and/or the poaching by Afghan intruders could have resulted in a lower population density in the area managed by this LLC.

Overall, the densities reflect pretty much the conservation effort of the different management units. Thereby the habitat quality and effects from surrounding areas must be considered.

E.4. Limiting factors for an optimal markhor population development

The survey results suggest that different factors in various extent limit the further growth of the markhor population. Key factors seem to be habitat quality and poaching pressure. In some areas the population density may be close to the carrying capacity of the habitat. In the area with the highest density of markhor per survey area size, the slopes of Darvaz range between Yakhshipun and Zighar, managed by LLC M-Sayod, the population did not grow since the last survey and vegetation shows signs of intensive browsing. In the nearby located areas upstream along the Panj river markhor had reportedly been absent for decades and only since around 2012 increasingly markhor expand into this area. Here habitat quality is heavily affected by intensive livestock grazing, with goats being the predominant species, combined with intensive harvest of shrubs, including the important forage species redbud (Cercis griffithii). Pasturing and domestic livestock can negatively influence markhor populations.

Ashraf (2010) found a diet overlap between domestic goat and Kashmir markhor Capra falconeri cashmiriensis and recommended that there has to be a ban on livestock grazing in core habitats of markhor.

In the part of the Darvaz range downstream of Yakhshipun, managed by NGO Muhofiz and LLC Bars, habitat conditions are virtually the same as upstream from Yakhshipun in the M-Sayod managed areas. Furthermore, one can expect that high population density in the latter area would cause immigration of markhor into this unit. The extremely lower density of markhor there can best be explained by poaching. Poaching is also a problem in other parts of the markhor range and may limit the growth of markhor populations and the expansion of range area. Poachers do not follow any hunting quotas and hunting season, this causes wildlife harassment that has a negative impact on mortality rates and the reproductive success of markhor. The compared to other areas extremely low numbers and density in the surveyed section of Dashtijum Strictly Protected Area and also comparably low densities and low percentage of trophy aged males in adjacent areas might be related to past (and possibly still ongoing) poaching, in particular reportedly by Afghan intruders in this difficult to control border area (Michel and Rosen 2015, Moheb 2011).

Share of the same habitat by markhor and domestic livestock increases the ability of disease transmission. 64 markhor died in 2010 because of Mycoplasma-pneumonia outbreak. Ostrowski et al. (2011) conclude that in all probability, domestic goats were the source of the infection. The infectious agent can be present in domestic goat herds without clinical symptoms and no effective vaccination exists for preventing this latent presence and transmission risk. We found signs of grazing goats and thus of acute risk of disease transmission in most markhor habitats. Minimizing the risk of disease transmission is a big challenge for Tajik agriculture authorities and veterinarians as well as conservancy managers.

The results of the survey confirm that regulated trophy hunting on markhor in the survey areas since 2014 has not have had any direct negative impact on the markhor population size. Current numbers and population structure show that in the areas for which the Academy of Sciences had recommended the allocation of quotas during the hunting season 2016/2017 numbers and population structure, including the recorded presence of trophy age males, indicate that the hunts not only did not have any detrimental influence on the conservation of the species, but actually were highly supportive to the active conservation management. This concerns the conservancies of LLC M-Sayod, LLC Saidi Tagnob and LLC Morkhur. Talks with rangers of these entities and with local community members as well as observations in the respective villages suggest that these entities invest substantial shares of the income earned from the hunts into conservation activities, like anti-poaching, continuous surveillance of their areas and the wildlife, and into community development and support, for instance the construction of pipes and tanks for clean drinking water, the expansion of streets, scholarships for students and materials for farming.

On the other hand, trophy hunting without clear conservation investment and use of income for the benefits of local communities can have disastrous adverse impacts. Especially if people from outside of the local villages capture most of the income, there is a high risk that local people feeling disenfranchised, will not support protection from poaching and habitat conservation and even start poaching themselves. We could not find any information about community support and benefit sharing of the companies LLC Safari Dashtijum, NGO Muhofiz and LLC Bars. People living in surrounding villages of these conservancies do not get any incentive to protect wildlife and especially the markhor because they do not benefit from its conservation. This lack of support by local people combined with insufficient protection by rangers of these agencies leads by all means to poaching. In addition to that, we were made aware by locals that non-sustainable hunts, including some by international hunters, may have occurred in areas of LLC Safari Dashtijum, NGO Muhofiz and LLC Bars. Further investigations should be conducted to test this allegation; however, our results suggest that population numbers and trends in the surveyed areas of LLC Safari Dashtijum and NGO Muhofiz remain far below their natural potential. This is a clear sign of the lack of effective conservation effort.

There is a high risk in small conservancy units like NGO Muhofiz, LLC Bars or LLC Safari Dashtijum, that a particular trophy age male may be pursued too long without any success and, thus, the hunting location may not be changed for a new trophy hunting attempt. If there are not enough accessible trophy age males in a specific area, younger males will get hunted illegally to satisfy the paying trophy hunter. This will lead to a quite negative impact on the local population of Heptner's markhor, with population growth remaining under its full potential. From an economical point of view, large hunting territories provide the opportunity to have more markhor and therefore more trophy age males. Hence, more trophy licenses may be justified, in an optimal situation. Moreover, non-scattered territories are easier to patrol for local rangers.

F. Management recommendations

In the following text, we shall provide recommendations especially on trophy hunting quotas for each conservancy unit for the hunting season of 2017/2018. Furthermore, these quotas should be suggested at the CITES CoP19 as export quotas for the next 5 years. This would support the sustainable use of Heptner's markhor by community-based trophy hunting, according to the IUCN Caprinae Specialist Group. Following these recommendations would also ensure the acceptance of CITES authorities and the USFWS, thus allowing a smooth trophy import back to the hunters' home countries.

F.1. Assessment of LLC Morkhur

Biological Sustainability: Our results suggest that the subpopulation inhabiting the territory of LLC Morkhur is growing. Rangers work with different methods e.g. patrolling and deploying camera traps to prevent poaching. The territory is large enough to change the location of hunting during a trip and reduce wildlife harassment. We also recorded 5 Bukhara urials Ovis orientalis bochariensis. A good protection of the territory of LLC Morkhur also ensures the protection of Dashtijum Strictly Protected Area.

Net Conservation Benefit: LLC Morkhur employs 12 rangers, mostly former poachers, from local villages. Furthermore, there is a community support which creates incentives to protect wildlife. However, this LLC should aim for more community support. The head of this conservancy unit lives close to his territory and his family has been cooperative for many years.

Markhor trophy quota: From a biological and socio-economic-cultural point of view, the harvest of two trophy age markhor can be sustainable. Therefore, we recommend and support a trophy hunting quota of two trophy age Heptner's markhor to be allocated to LLC Morkhur.

F.2. Assessment of LLC Saidi Tagnob

Biological Sustainability: The comparison of our results with previous surveys suggest that the local population numbers in the territory of LLC Saidi Tagnob are growing. We also observed 2 wolves Canis lupus. Rangers patrol the territory to prevent poaching. The total territory is large enough to shift the location of hunting during a trip to reduce wildlife harassment.

Net Conservation Benefit: LLC Saidi Tagnob employs 15 local rangers, mostly former poachers from surrounding villages. The community support by this company is exemplary.

Incentives for the local community to protect wildlife are given not only by supplying villages with resources, but also by employing local people in community-based gardens. LLC Saidi Tagnob supports the local border police, which also prevents poaching by Afghan intruders. The head of Saidi Tagnob and his family are traditional hunters, part of the community and live directly next to the hunting territory and patrol the areas every day.

Markhor trophy quota: From a biological and socio-economic-cultural point of view, the harvest of three trophy age markhor can be sustainable. Therefore, we recommend and support a trophy hunting quota of three trophy age Heptner's markhor for LLC Saidi Tagnob.

F.3. Assessment of LLC Safari Dashtijum

Biological Sustainability: Our results show a small population number with two trophy age males. The area had not been surveyed in 2016. Because of the small size of this territory, a change of the location during a hunting trip would be impossible. In our opinion, the size of the area managed by LLC Safari Dashitjum is too small to effectively manage a species like Heptner's markhor, because suitable habitat is insufficient to support a larger, sustainably huntable population size. Nothing is known of the work to prevent poaching. According to locals, non-sustainable markhor hunts have occured in LLC Safari Dashtijum. Further investigations should be done to substantiate this allegation. Non-sustainable trophy hunting puts at risk the success of the whole conservation project and it should be prevented.

Net Conservation Benefit: LLC Safari Dashtijum claims to employ six rangers occasionally as the do not get paid regularly, and we had a chance to meet two or three of them. There is no community support in any form. However, the head of LLC Safari Dashtijum lives close to his territory.

Markhor trophy quota: From a biological and socio-economic-cultural point of view, we cannot recommend or support any trophy hunting quota for this conservancy. Changes in the management of the areas currently assigned to LLC Safari Dashitjum should be considered by decision-makers to ensure a long term community-based conservation hunting success of Heptner's markhor in Tajikistan. We recommend facilitating a closer collaboration and involvement of LLC Saidi Tagnob as a co-manager and example for community-based trophy hunting in the management of LLC Safari Dashtijum. On top of that, the involvement of other local hunters from the Khirmanjo village would be necessary to make them stop poaching and to ensure an improved net conservation benefit.

F.4. Assessment of NGO Muhofiz

Biological Sustainability: Our results show a small number of animals with just two trophy age males. According to the head of NGO Muhofiz, not much information on the status of markhor in their second area is available. Reportedly, six rangers patrol the areas of NGO Muhofiz and LLC Bars. Nothing is known about their approach to minimize poaching. According to locals, members of NGO Muhofiz are hunting markhor in a non-sustainable way or organize such hunts. Further investigations should be done to provide evidence for this allegation. Non-sustainable trophy hunting jeopardises the success of the whole conservation project and should be prevented. The territories of NGO Muhofiz are too small and highly fragmented for an effective markhor management.

Net Conservation Benefit: There is no community support in any form. Instead of employing more rangers and giving incentives to locals for conservation, the rangers are shared between NGO Muhofiz and LLC Bars.

Markhor trophy quota: From a biological and socio-economic-cultural point of view, we cannot recommend or support any trophy license for this conservancy. Changes in the management of the areas currently assigned to NGO Muhofiz should be considered by decision-makers to ensure a long term community-based conservation hunting success of Heptner's markhor in Tajikistan. We recommend a closer collaboration and involvement of LLC Saidi Tagnob as a co-manager and example for community-based trophy hunting in the management of NGO Muhofiz. LLC Saidi Tagnob could contribute from the trophy hunting incomes to the protection of all Parvor mountain (involving inhabitants from following villages: Parvor, Yol, Sarigor) without conducting hunts here.

F.5. Assessment of LLC M-Sayod

Biological Sustainability: Our results suggest that the subpopulation inhabiting the territory LLC M-Sayod is growing. There are a significant high number of adult markhor males in this territory. An enlargement of the markhor home ranges could be proved. We also recorded one snow leopard Panthera uncia, one Tien Shan brown bear Ursus arctos isabellinus and several Asiatic ibexes Capra sibirica. Rangers patrol frequently and minimize poaching. The area is large enough that a hunter could change hunting location during his trip and thus reduce wildlife harassment.

Net Conservation Benefit: LLC M-Sayod employs 20 rangers (all of them local people of various villages), many of them had a special staff training. The family of LLC M-Sayod is part of the local community and they have been into conservation for many years. The community support is exemplary as LLC M-Sayod not only creates incentives for the local community to protect wildlife but also supports students with scholarships to enhance the educational status of people living in this community. On top of that, LLC M-Sayod supports the local border police.

Markhor trophy quota: From a biological and socio-economic-cultural point of view, the harvest of four trophy age markhor is sustainable. Therefore, we recommend and support a trophy hunting quota of four trophy age Heptner's markhor to be allocated to LLC M-Sayod.

F.6. Assessment of LLC-Bars

Biological Sustainability: We do not have any valuable data or estimates for the population status of Hepner's markhor inhabiting the territory of LLC Bars. Because of the small size of this territory, a change of the hunting location during a trip would be impossible. In our opinion, the size of LLC Bars is too small and fragmented to manage the Heptner's markhor to a population size that would allow sustainable hunting.

Six rangers are shared between LLC Bars and NGO Muhofiz. Nothing is known about their approach to obstruct poaching. According to locals, non-sustainable markhor hunts have been organized by LLC Bars for many years. Further investigations are required to prove this statement. Non-sustainable trophy hunting jeopardises the success of the whole conservation project and should be prevented.

Net Conservation Benefit: There is no valuable community support. The head of LLC Bars is not a local traditional hunter coming from the community. His family originates in another part of Tajikistan, never lived in the area and according to his son, they are living primarily in Russia. This does not fulfil our understanding and requirements of a community-based conservancy.

Markhor trophy quota: From a biological and socio-economic-cultural point of view, we cannot recommend or support any trophy license for LLC Bars. Significant changes in the administration of the areas currently assigned to LLC Bars should be introduced by decision-makers to ensure a long term community-based conservation hunting success of Heptner's markhor in Tajikistan.

F.7. Grazing and firewood cutting

Outside of core areas without any extractive resource use, livestock grazing needs to be regulated and habitats with preferred plant species should be protected from overly intensive fuel wood harvest, with slow growing Juniper being entirely excluded from any cutting. Overall awareness of the public about importance of biodiversity in general and threatened species in particular should be raised to win their support and cooperation in conservation efforts.

F.8. Territory size

We promote the approach of large hunting territories (minimum 10,000 ha) connected into one unit, under management of local and traditional hunters living in or very close to their hunting ground. Local and traditional hunters are part of the community; they should feel more responsible for wildlife inhabiting their territory and, as conservancy managers, they should provide incentives for the local community to support conservation. In our understanding, these criteria are required for a LLC or NGO head who gets supported by the international conservation community. The administration of a large and connected territory also has ecological and economic advantages. From an ecological point of view a sufficiently large area with natural boundaries provides enough habitat and forage to a local subpopulation of at least several hundred markhor, with sufficient old-age males to allow for sustainable and successful trophy hunting. A larger area allows the markhor to select year-round most suitable habitat for foraging, rut, giving birth and escaping from predators. Small areas may not cover year-round habitat and leave the markhor and other animals unprotected during large parts of the year. Furthermore, a large territory of the size of LLC Morkhur, LLC Saidi Tagnob or LLC M-Sayod gives the possibility to choose the location of hunting (valley, canyon, etc.). After an unsuccessful stalking of a specific old age markhor or wild boar Sus scrofa, hunters can continue their stalk in another area sufficiently far away from the first one. This increases hunting success, while reducing the hunting pressure, which is a stressful form of wildlife harassment, with negative impacts on animals in a specific area.

F.9. Hunting enclosures

In a meeting at the beginning of the survey, Mr. Zafar Bekmurodi, head of the Hot Spring Company for Marco Polo Hunting and member of the Association of Hunters of Tajikistan, reported about introductions of different animal species (mouflon, ring-necked pheasants, fallow deer, sika deer) to establish hunting enclosures. In general, the creation of hunting enclosures is regulated by law and thus legal. However, non-native species and subspecies may have very negative impacts on the local biodiversity in these areas and, if they escape from fenced areas, their long term impact can upset the local animal and plant communities.

Introducing non-native animals should be discouraged, as most likely long-term negative and unpredictable impacts on native ecosystems and species will occur. We do not support the establishment of hunting enclosures, including the possible captive breeding of markhor and urial for trophy hunting purposes. Such practices can cause massive damage to the successful community-based markhor conservation programme and to biodiversity conservation in Tajikistan. Examples of these consequences include:

- Harm to ecosystems caused by non-native herbivores like fallow or sika deer;
- Harm to native species, if these are outcompeted by introduced ones e.g. for feeding on similar forage;
- Hybridization of non-native ring-necked pheasants with the native pheasant subspecies will occur if the former escape from captivity, are released for hunting or are crossbred in the aviary. This bears the very high risk of irreversible loss of the pure endemic pheasant subspecies Phasianus colchicus colchicus, for which Tajikistan is one of the few remaining areas in the World where this pheasant subspecies has survived in purity until the present time. Also Mediterranean mouflons can readily hybridize with native urial, and sika deer and other red deer ssp can hybridize with the endemic Bukhara deer. Even one single hybridisation event can cause genetic pollution of native populations and their extinction through the loss of their genetic identity;
- Economic damage can be caused at several levels: generally, hunting enclosures have a poor cost-benefit ratio as they provide little return for high investment and maintenance costs; most foreign hunters prefer native, free-ranging populations for hunting and are rarely interested to shoot animals in fenced areas or animals released from an enclosure; the existence of hunting enclosures puts at risk the good reputation of Tajikistan as a hunting destination with exclusively free ranging and well managed native animal populations; the risks of hybridization may lead to the perception that animals offered for hunting are not the pure wild forms but hybrids, which are of much less value to hunters; ecosystem degradation inside the hunting enclosures caused by non-native animals and impact of escaped or purposefully released animals can cause further damage.

- Impacts on human health can be caused if animals are hand-reared or habituated to humans and become aggressive when adult. Especially deer can be very dangerous and deaths and serious injuries of keepers and of unrelated visitors may occur.

E. IMPORT OF SPORT-HUNTED TROPHIES (Appendix I of CITES and/or ESA)

Note 1: This form should be used to request authorization to import trophies of species listed on Appendix I of CITES and/or as threatened or endangered under the ESA (examples include elephants, lions, cheetahs, wood bison, and markhor).

PLEASE USE FORM 3-200-19 FOR SOUTHERN AFRICAN LEOPARD TROPHIES AND SOUTHERN WHITE RHINOCEROS TROPHIES TAKEN IN NAMIBIA.

Note 2: If you hold an import permit for a trophy that you did not use, please return the unused original permit. If you are requesting reissuance of a permit because you have taken a trophy, but were unable to import it prior to the expiration of the permit, please use the renewal form (3-200-52) and return your original permit with that form.

Note 3: Applications for species listed as endangered under the U.S. Endangered Species Act are published in the Federal Register for a 30-day public comment period. Please allow at least 90 days for the application to be processed.

Note 4: Sport-hunted trophy is defined at 50 CFR 23.74 as follows: Sport-hunted trophy means a whole dead animal or a readily recognizable part or derivative of an animal specifically identified on the accompanying CITES document that meets the following criteria:

- Is raw, processed, or manufactured;
- Was legally obtained by the hunter through hunting for his or her personal use;
- Is being imported, exported, or re-exported by or on behalf of the hunter as part of the transfer from its country of origin ultimately to the hunter's country of usual residence; and
- Includes worked, manufactured, or handicraft items made from the sport-hunted animal only when:
  - i. Such items are contained in the same shipment as raw or tanned parts of the sport-hunted animal and are for the personal use of the hunter;
  - ii. The quantity of such items is no more than could reasonably be expected given the number of animals taken by the hunter as shown on the license or other documentation of the authorized hunt accompanying the shipment; and
  - iii. The accompanying CITES documents (export document and, if appropriate, import permit) contain a complete itemization and description of all items included in the shipment.

Note 5: Certain hunting trophies, including elephants, are subject to restrictions on their use after import into the United States. Please see 50 CFR 23.55 for more information or contact the Division of Management Authority.

Please provide the following information. Complete all questions on the application. Mark questions that are not applicable with "N/A". If needed, use a separate sheet of paper. Customs Rules on Discharge of Importers Liability for Duties

The U.S. Customs Service has issued a final amendment of the regulations to provide an alternative procedure for an importer record to pay duties on imported merchandise through a licensed customhouse broker. Present rules provide for the payment of duties to Customs by a broker on behalf of the importer. Under the alternatew procedure, the importer may elect to submit to the broker a separate check or bank draft for the duties payable to the "U.S. Customs Service". The broker would then deliver the importer's check or bank draft to Customs. The new rule also requires brokers to provide written notification to their clients, advising that if i the client is an importer of record, payment to the broker will not relieve the client of liability for Customs charges in the event that the charges are not paid by the broker. Brokers will be required to provide this notification to all active clients annually during the month of February. Additionally, brokers will be required to provide such information on a power of attorney executed on or after the effective date of the new rule. These amendments are effective as of September 27, 1982

The U.S. Customs Service has issued a final amendment of the regulations to provide an alternative procedure for an Importer record to pay duties on imported merchandise through a licensed customhouse broker. Present rules provide for the payment of duties to Customs by a broker on behalf of the Importer. Under the alternative procedure, the Importer may elect to submit to the broker a separate check or bank draft for the duties payable to the "U.S. Customs Service". The broker would then deliver the Importer's check or bank draft to Customs. The new rule also requires brokers to provide written notification to their clients, advising that if I the client is an Importer of record, payment to the broker will not relieve the client of liability for Customs charges in the event that the charges are not paid by the broker. Brokers will be required to provide this notification to all active clients annually during the month of February. Additionally, brokers will be required to provide such information on a power of attorney executed on or after the effective date of the new rule. These amendments are effective as of September 27, 1982

Customs Rules on Discharge of Importers Liability for Duties

The U.S. Customs Service has issued a final amendment of the regulations to provide an alternative procedure for an Importer record to pay duties on imported merchandise through a licensed customhouse broker. Present rules provide for the payment of duties to Customs by a broker on behalf of the importer. Under the alternative procedure, the Importer may elect to submit to the broker a separate check or bank draft for the duties payable to the "U.S. Customs Service". The broker would then deliver the Importer's check or bank draft to Customs. The new rule also requires brokers to provide written notification to their clients, advising that if I the client is an Importer of record, payment to the broker will not relieve the client of liability for Customs charges in the event that the charges are not paid by the broker. Brokers will be required to provide this notification to all active clients annually during the month of February. Additionally, brokers will be required to provide such information on a power of attorney executed on or after the effective date of the new rule. These amendments are effective as of September 27, 1982

Customs Rules on Discharge of Importers Liability for Duties

The U.S. Customs Service has issued a final amendment of the regulations to provide an alternative procedure for an importer record to pay duties on imported merchandise through a licensed customhouse broker. Present rules provide for the payment of duties to Customs by a broker on behalf of the importer. Under the alternative procedure, the importer may elect to submit to the broker a separate check or bank draft for the duties payable to the "U.S. Customs Service". The broker would then deliver the importer's check or bank draft to Customs. The new rule also requires brokers to provide written notification to their clients, advising that if I the client is an importer of record, payment to the broker will not relieve the client of liability for Customs charges in the event that the charges are not paid by the broker. Brokers will be required to provide this notification to all active clients annually during the month of February. Additionally, brokers will be required to provide such information on a power of attorney executed on or after the effective date of the new rule. These amendments are effective as of September 27, 1982.

Customs Rules on Discharge of Importers Liability for Duties

The U.S. Customs Service has issued a final amendment of the regulations to provide an alternative procedure for an importer record to pay duties on imported merchandise through a licensed customhouse broker. Present rules provide for the payment of duties to Customs by a broker on behalf of the importer. Under the alternative procedure, the importer may elect to submit to the broker a separate check or bank draft for the duties payable to the "U.S. Customs Service". The broker would then deliver the importer's check or bank draft to Customs. The new rule also requires brokers to provide written notification to their clients, advising that if I the client is an importer of record, payment to the broker will not relieve the client of liability for Customs charges in the event that the charges are not paid by the broker. Brokers will be required to provide this notification to all active clients annually during the month of February. Additionally, brokers will be required to provide such information on a power of attorney executed on or after the effective date of the new rule. These amendments are effective as of September 27, 1982

Dear Jorge,

Safari Specialty Importers applied on behalf of our client, Scott Nelson Roberts, for a CITES Import Permit (Leopard) on July 11, 2019. We received the CITES Permit with the incorrect country of origin listed on 9/13/19. We reached out to the USFW Office to have this corrected and did not receive a response on how it needed to be corrected for three weeks. Upon receiving the instructions on how to have this issue fixed, we immediately provided all necessary information to Miguel Richardson so he could proceed. We would appreciate this correction to be expedited as we have now gone 3 months waiting for this permit.

I find your refusal to have FedEx labels created to return the original, Incorrect CITES form to you as procedure dictates, and the Corrected CITES permit sent to us deeply concerning. We go to great lengths to make sure that all permits submitted by us are correct with all necessary information to make the review process easy for your office to complete. We use FedEx to transport the applications and Permits to guarantee their safe delivery, as these forms are absolutely essential to have for our clients. In this case, USFW made an error on the issued permit that renders it unusable. We paid for the safe delivery and return of a valid CITES Permit via FedEx and ask that you would provide the same to ensure that the new permit arrives safely.

If you have any questions, please feel free to contact me.

Respectfully,

Wyatt Fetner

Dear Sir/Madame:

I have a leopard import permit # 19US48029D/9 that has a mis-spelling of the Consigner's name that needs to be corrected.

This mis-spelling is in section 4 – Consigner on the original permit.

The correct name and correct spelling for the Consigner is:

Jacobus Hendrik Honiball

Please correct this name on my permit and re-issue to me with this corrected spelling of the consigner. (all other information on the original permit is accurate).

Please expedite this amendment request and issue me the corrected permit ASAP. My leopard is taxidermy complete and is crated and awaiting this corrected permit to be shipped to me in the USA. My crate is currently sitting in storage in Namibia and I am being charged a daily storage fee until this is shipped to me in the USA.

I have attached the $50 processing fee. I have also attached a Fed Ex envelope, prepaid, that I request you use to send me the amended/corrected spelling permit.

Sincerely yours,

(b)(6)
Dennis Jordan

Customs Rules on Discharge of Importers Liability for Duties

The U.S. Customs Service has issued a final amendment of the regulations to provide an alternative procedure for an Importer record to pay duties on imported merchandise through a licensed customhouse broker. Present rules provide for the payment of duties to Customs by a broker on behalf of the importer. Under the alternative procedure, the Importer may elect to submit to the broker a separate check or bank draft for the duties payable to the "U.S. Customs Service". The broker would then deliver the Importer's check or bank draft to Customs. The new rule also requires brokers to provide written notification to their clients, advising that if I the client is an Importer of record, payment to the broker will not relieve the client of liability for Customs charges in the event that the charges are not paid by the broker. Brokers will be required to provide this notification to all active clients annually during the month of February. Additionally, brokers will be required to provide such information on a power of attorney executed on or after the effective date of the new rule. These amendments are effective as of September 27, 1982.

Re: Permit 19US49113D913177D

Please be advised we have just received the above enclosed import permit but the Consignor country in box 4 was printed incorrectly. Please correct the country to read Zimbabwe not Zambia. We originally applied for the correct country as well and do not expect to be charged for the correction. Thank you.

SASE FedEx included for corrected permit.

Thank you

Customs Rules on Discharge of Importers Liability for Duties

The U.S. Customs Service has issued a final amendment of the regulations to provide an alternative procedure for an Importer record to pay duties on imported merchandise through a licensed customhouse broker. Present rules provide for the payment of duties to Customs by a broker on behalf of the importer. Under the alternative procedure, the Importer may elect to submit to the broker a separate check or bank draft for the duties payable to the "U.S. Customs Service". The broker would then deliver the Importer's check or bank draft to Customs. The new rule also requires brokers to provide written notification to their clients, advising that if I the client is an Importer of record, payment to the broker will not relieve the client of liability for Customs charges in the event that the charges are not paid by the broker. Brokers will be required to provide this notification to all active clients annually during the month of February. Additionally, brokers will be required to provide such information on a power of attorney executed on or after the effective date of the new rule. These amendments are effective as of September 27, 1982.

RE: Import Application for a Republic of South Africa wild Lion (Panthera leo) Trophy

Dear Chief Cogliano:

Enclosed please find the permit application to import a "wild" lion trophy from Republic of South Africa for Roger Key. Included in our application packet is a copy of the Lion Management Plan for Khamab Kahalari Reserve, where, the operator, Coenraad Vermaak Safaris operates. The hunt will take place in August 2019.

In evaluating this ESA import application, please consider the information in your files describing Khamab Kalahari Reserve's mission and vision, which is to create a game reserve large enough to conserve natural habitats and maintain a wide variety of African wild herbivores and carnivores that naturally occurred in this habitat in the past. The Khamab Kalahari Reserve relies upon licensed, regulated sport-hunting to generate conservation incentives and funding to protects these habitats.

Please refer to the hundreds of pages of information Conservation Force previously submitted to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, as well as information submitted by the RSA authorities, outfitters, and others, in issuing an import permit for this Lion trophy.

NOTE: DMA has approved all permits in this area in the past. Please see 2016 PRT13492C.

Please do not hesitate to contact us if you have questions about this permit application.

Sincerely,

John J. Jackson III

For species listed under the Endangered Species Act, please be aware that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service must make a finding that your activities will enhance or benefit wild populations of the species involved. While we will communicate with the range country for the species you will hunt or hunted when making the required findings, if you have any information that could support this finding, it would be helpful to our review if you could provide it. Please submit such information on a separate page with your application.

   a. Do you have any information regarding the population status or trend data on the species hunted?

      Please refer to page 23 of the Lion Management Plan for Khamab Kalahari Reserve with population data and page 44 for information on the monitoring program. The last 3 pages of the report include a graph data with lion population trends.

   b. In order to hunt, you likely paid for licenses or trophy fees. What were those fees and do you have any information on how those funds were used by either the landowner, community, or government?

      $90,000.00 USD in licenses and trophy fees have been paid. The Coenraad Vermaak Safaris donates meat from trophy hunted animals and supports the Lidgeton Cresche and Soup kitchen located near Kwa Natal midlands and provides funding for anti-paoching patrols.

   c. Do you have information on other funding activities that are being carried out, or were carried out, by the safari outfitter, professional hunter, concession holder, or land owner that provide a conservation benefit to the species being hunted/species hunted?

      In addition to managing the lion population, the Kalahari Reserve maintains and restocks viable populations of all wild herbivors and predator species. The safari company also adheres to a strict code of conduct which ensures the sustainable utilization of wildlife through ethical hunting for the benefit of people, wildlife and wild places.

khamab
Kalahari Reserve

INTRODUCTION

The management of lions on small fenced game reserves has always been a contentious issue. There are two schools of thought; one promotes a hands-off approach to lion management as far as possible, while the other suggests the need for intensive management of the lion populations. Up till now not one of these points of view have been proven as the correct approach, although the intensive management of lions by far exceeded a hands-off lion management as the method of choice by reserve managers of small game reserves. Although the majority of reserve managers would prefer a hands-off approach, they feel that they cannot afford to let the lion population go, and in very small reserve they are right. Despite very intensive management of the lion populations, a large majority of reserves still experienced perceived "problems" with their populations. These "problems" were very rapid population growths resulting in high predation impacts on the prey populations, as well as issues with keeping the genetic integrity intact in the small populations.

Few reserves or national parks in South Africa are large enough to allow for a completely natural predator system, and all will require some sort of management intervention to a larger or lesser degree. However, the level of management intervention will depend on the objectives off each reserve, as well as the reason why they choose to have lions on the reserve

More and more studies are revealing how vital top predators are in the operation of ecosystem processes, which filters right down to the different trophic levels. Most lion reintroductions are for eco-tourism purposes rather than purely ecological reasons, but even though this is the case for most reserves, the value that they bring to the operation of the ecosystems is not always realized. The reserves whose primary motivation for introducing lions are for purposes of ecotourism, adopt mostly an intensive lion management approach to keep lion numbers within strict predetermined boundaries. This intensive management approach relies heavily on contraception, vasectomies and culling as a way of achieving their objectives. A small minority of reserves, on the other hand, sees lions as a very important part of the system and includes the importance of allowing the system to function with as little management intervention as possible as an objective in their management plans. This principle should also filter through to predator management plans, which should attempt to come as close to a hands-off approach on lion management as possible. However, the effect of a largely hands-off approach on "small" fenced reserves is still unknown, and it is unsure whether this approach will lead to natural population control measures (as seen in very large or open systems) to come into effect.

Lions have the capability to recover rapidly after disturbances, leading to rapid population growths on reserves after new populations get established, and quickly exceeds the pre-determined carrying capacity based on impact on prey populations. Previously managers reacted to this by regular translocation of lions to new reserves. However, options for translocations have largely disappeared as a result of excess lions available at several reserves across the country. This led to an increasing dependency on culling and birth control measures in an attempt to keep the fast population growth rates under control.

However, this approach is symptomatic and does not address to the underlying issues of why population "problems" occur. The challenge of developing a management plan is to find ways to mimic natural control mechanisms, thereby targeting the cause of ecological issues rather than treating the symptoms.

In natural lion populations, the high infanticide rates and associated social consequences as a result of regular turn-over of dominant males in prides lead to relatively stable populations. However, in small and highly controlled population this is not the case, and males tend to stay in "control" of

KHAMAB KALAHARI RESERVE (Pty) Ltd

Vision

To create a game reserve that is large enough to conserve:

- Unspoilt landscapes and habitats that visually typify the Kalahari Bushveld
- As wide as possible variety of African wild herbivores and carnivores that naturally occurred in such landscapes/habitats in the past.
- Natural ecological processes to the extent that the system functions with as little management intervention as possible.

Mission

To realise the vision our mission is to take on the challenges of:

- Maintaining (and where necessary restocking) viable populations of all the wild herbivore and predator species that occurred naturally in the Kalahari Bushveld in the past
- Giving very special attention to the conservation of endangered species such as black rhino, cheetah, wild dog and birds of prey
- Eliminating those plant and animal species that are deemed to be alien to this bioregion or for other reasons ethically unacceptable including domestic livestock
- Rehabilitating the Kalahari Bushveld landscape to resemble its former natural state by removing all signs of the visually unappealing structures of past farming and other land use and land development practices
- Restoring/simulating the natural ecological processes of the Kalahari Bushveld (e.g. fire frequency, surface water distribution, migration and predation) that have been disrupted by past farming practices
- Ensuring that all of the above is sustainable by:
    - Establishing a comprehensive wildlife research and monitoring programme
    - Harmonising the game reserve's policies, strategies, plans and actions with Government's vision, laws, policies, plans and aspirations for the region
    - Making the game reserve a long term investment success

prides for very long periods, leading to pride instability and high cub survival. Also, regular population control actions, like culling and removals, prevent density dependent population control mechanisms from coming into effect. Two typical density dependent control mechanisms are age of first reproduction of females, and litter size. In low density populations lions breed at a younger age, have bigger litters, and the survival rates of litters are much higher. Therefore, regular culling or removal of lions leads to an increase in the above mentioned factors, resulting in faster population growth.

One of the biggest concerns for managers is the impact that lions have on the prey populations of small fenced reserves. This problem is exaggerated by inappropriate management actions like regular removal and/or supplementation of prey. Also, coupled with the factors in the previous paragraph, lack of social stability because of high male tenures and slow male turnovers, often resulting in several individuals rather than prides on a reserve, which increase the impact on the prey population.

One of the biggest mistakes is that managers ignore the temporal and spatial variability in ecosystems, and want to keep the system as stable as possible based on pre-determined "carrying capacities". This is largely driven because of economic demands and expectations, coupled with the demands of tourism and/or trophy hunting. Very few reserves will allow for the natural control mechanisms and the associated fluctuations to take its course.

Despite being the ideal management approach and the advantages associated with letting natural control mechanisms to come into play, it must also be kept in mind that it will probably not be possible in small fences systems, Madikwe Game Reserve being an example. Despite high lion densities and some natural control mechanisms starting to have an effect, the densities was still not high enough to ensure a population that can function without any management interference. If left completely, the population will without doubt reach a point where the lion population will regulate itself. However, the turning point in the population density where this will occur is unknown, and the associated impact in prey populations means that no reserve in South Africa has been brave enough or had the capacity to let this process run its full course. Therefore, as mentioned elsewhere, the objectives of each conservation area or reserve will determine at which point in time management will intervene, and what interventions they will use.

1.9 Potential for enlarging the property

When Khamab started in 2007, there was an extensive drive to acquire a large portion of land, and several farms were bought and consolidated to shape the 95 500ha property.

Although it is not priority at the moment, there is potential for enlarging the current property by purchasing other neighbouring properties if they become available on the market. KKR will pursue these options if they are available at the right price in order to consolidate the current reserve.

1.10 Specifications of the perimeter fence

The fence line has been inspected and approved and are up to DACE specifications for the keeping of large game and predators.

The total height of the fence is 2.4m. The bottom 1.2m is fenced with bonnox, with 8 steel wires completing the top 1.2m.

On the inside of the fence there are five electrified strands at heights of 20cm, 50cm, 120cm, 180cm and 240cm as per specifications.

200mm line – on a 22cm double offset bracket with earth
500mm line – on a 22cm double offset bracket with earth
1200mm line – on a 22cm offset bracket
1800mm line – on a 40cm double offset bracket with earth
2400mm line – on a 40cm double offset bracket with earth.

An additional trip and earth wire about 60cm away from the main fence, and 10-20cm from the ground with an additional earth wire.

The voltage of the fence ranges between 6000V-8000V, and the entire fence line of 230km is patrolled on a daily basis.

The fence line is kept clean from plant material by the application of herbicides at a distance of 1m on both sides of the fence. A further 4m strip on the inside and a 2m strip on the outside are disked with a tractor and disk once a year to keep vegetation clear from the fence.

2 ECOLOGICAL

2.1 General climatic and hydrological data

2.1.1 Rainfall

Khamab Kalahari Reserve falls within the summer rainfall region of Southern Africa, with the majority of rain occurring between October and April. The mean annual rainfall according to farmers in the area is estimated at 320 mm, with a high annual coefficient of variation (CV) of 34%. This means that the area is semi-arid with a rainfall pattern that is erratic and unpredictable for any one year or series of years (Collinson & Brett 2007)

As to be expected in an arid environment, the annual mean rainfall across the reserve varies a lot between season to season. The period of 2011 to 2013 was very dry, with the 2012/13 season being particularly dry with only 188.3mm on average across the reserve. The perception during the 2013/14 season was that it was also very dry, but that was largely due to long periods during the rainfall season without any rain, and then the figures were bolstered when the majority of the rainfall all came in a short space of time towards the end of the season, as can be seen lower down in this document.

Table 4: Annual rainfall figures at the different weather stations on Khamab from July 2010 to June 2014

	Rainfall (mm)				Annual mean
Weather station	2010/11	2011/12	2012/13	2013/14
Esperance	502.6	285.8	223.8	423.2	358.9
Ngwaphiwane	345.2	235.8	176.2	371.4	282.2
Sweetwater	401.8	249	164.8	447.6	315.8
Mean	416.5	256.9	188.3	414.1	318.9

This rainfall pattern can often be visually seen during the rainfall season, when thundershowers often pass the reserve on the south-eastern and eastern side, or on the north-western side. This is also reflected in the rainfall figures in Table 1 above.

2.1.2 Temperature

Since the reserve started measuring temperature in 2010, the highest temperature measured on Khamab was 43.2°C which was measured at Esperance in October 2011, and the coldest temperature recorded was -7.1°C at Sweetwater in July 2012.

Over the last four years, the three months with the warmest mean temperatures were November, December and January, with January having the highest mean temperature of 26.7°C.

However, the highest mean maximum temperature is 40.3°C during November, followed by October and December with 39.7 °C each.

On average over the last four years, June has been the coldest month with a mean of 12.5°C, followed by July with 12.6°C.

The lowest mean minimum temperatures have been in June with -4.5°C, followed by July with -4.4°C.

2.1.3 Hydrology

The region is drained by the Molopo River. Although this river meanders for a great distance along the border between South African and Botswana before eventually joining the Orange River below the Augrabies Falls, it seldom has any surface flow. The fossilized Pephane River flows through the area to the southwest of KKR, but no other river courses (neither perennial nor ephemeral) are present on the reserve. Short-lived floods of the Molopo have occurred in recent years which attract a large number of water bird species into the area.

Accordingly, the key feature of the area is the complete absence of perennial surface water. This phenomenon has been the most important influence on the presence, abundance and distribution of indigenous plant and animal species.

Another significant feature of the area is the presence of endorheic pans (pans that do not possess an outflow). A number of large pans are present on the reserve. After the occurrence of heavy thunderstorms they may hold water for some time.

For the following reasons these pans add incredible value to a wildlife conservation project such Khamab Kalahari Reserve:

- The distribution of game animals (both herbivores and carnivores) tends to be highly concentrated on these pans and their immediate surrounds.
- This is due the soil nutrient status and soil moisture retention capacity of these pans being significantly higher than that of the "sea" of red sands making up the substrate of most of the area
- The presence of ephemeral surface water in these pans after thunder storms allows for "mini migrations" of certain water dependant game species (e.g. zebra) to grazing in areas that they normally avoid due to the absence of perennial surface water

The water table is generally very deep with boreholes being sunk to depths of 200 m. Due to the critical importance of groundwater in this semi-arid area with no perennial surface water, boreholes and the immediate surrounding areas are regarded as sensitive areas.

2.2 General description of geology and soils

The most visible geological feature of KKR is the substrate of red windblown sands of the Kalahari Group which occur uniformly over most of the reserve at depths which in places exceed 1.2 meters. These Kalahari sands are underlain by tillites, sandstones, mudstone and shale's. However, due to the depth of the sand substrate these rock formations are not visible on the landscape surface. Localised areas of exposed limestone (calcrete) occur along the Molopo River and in and around the edges of the pans. The Molopo river course is underlain by quartzites.

This uniformity of substrate on KKR is very different to most other areas in South Africa where landscapes are normally characterised by a mosaic of different soil and rock substrates. A less visible but, nevertheless, important additional feature of the geology of KKR is that groundwater is found at great depths beneath the deep layer of sandy substrate

Apart from its characteristic red colour and sandy texture, a key feature of the soil substrate is its relatively high fertility status. Another key feature is the very limited water-retaining capacity of the soil and the high infiltration and flatness means that there is virtually no runoff and all rain penetrates the soil. Soil erosion is thus of very little concern in this part of the Kalahari.

On a more scientific note these soils can be described as generally well-aggregated (apedal) and freely drained with a high base status which is the result of limited leaching under an arid climate. Soils of the river beds and pans are more alluvial in nature and their fertility status is even higher than that of the surrounding red sands. Occasional patches of lighter coloured sands (whitish to grey) are found in small depressions that intersperse the sea of red sands.

2.3 Vegetation Biome and Bioregion

KKR falls within the Savanna Biome of South Africa. This biome, which covers one-third of the country, is the most widespread of the biomes found in South Africa. As there are considerable climatic and therefore species variations within the Savanna Biome, with an east to west declining rainfall gradient, it has been considered useful to sub-divide this biome into six bioregions. Accordingly, KKR falls within the Eastern Kalahari Bushveld Bioregion which is that part of the Savanna Biome that extends westwards from Mafikeng to the Botswana border in the west and the Orange River in the south.

At a more local level the vegetation type in which KKR occurs has been classified and named in various ways over the years by various authors as follows:

- Kalahari Thornveld - Acocks (1975)
- Kalahari Plains Thorn Bushveld – Low & Rebelo (1996)
- Molopo Bushveld – Mucina & Rutherford (2004)

The above vegetation types are thus essentially synonymous with each other but for convenience the most current of these, namely Molopo Bushveld, will be used in this report. In broad terms the Molopo Bushveld may be described as follows:

- Structure – open woodland to a closed shrubland
- Prominent tree species – Acacia erioloba, Boscia albitrunca, Ziziphus mucronata, Acacia mellifera, A. luederitzii and Terminalia sericea
- Prominent shrub species – Acacia haematoxylon, Acacia hebeclada, Grewia flava, Rhus burchelli, Rhus tenuinervis, Lycium cinereum, Euclea undulate, Ehretia rigida and Rhigozum trichotomum
- Prominent grass species – Schmidtia pappaphoroides, S. kalahariensis, Stipagrostis uniplumis. S. ciliata, Cenchrus ciliaris, Andropogon chinensis, Aristida diffusa, Digitaria eriantha, Urochloa mozambicensis, Panicum coloratum, Setaria verticilata, Cynodon dactylon, Eragrostis lehmanniana, E. rigidior; Heteropogon contortus and Melinis repens.

Large specimens of Acacia erioloba, commonly known as the Camel Thorn, are a key feature of this veld type and for that matter the Kalahari as a whole. Unfortunately, large specimens of this species are scarce over most parts of KKR except on the deeper sands along the banks of the Molopo River. Their scarcity in KKR and the surrounding farms is attributed by some local land owners to large scale felling of the larger trees for fence posts and charcoal production in the past. However, field observations suggest that the scarcity of large specimens is more likely to be substrate influenced (large trees confined to pockets of deeper sand underlain by a relatively high water table) and hence a natural ecological phenomenon rather than man induced.

The floors of the scattered pans of the Molopo Bushveld are dominated by grasses such as Sporobolus coromandelianus, Enneapogon desvauxii and shrubs such as Rhigozum trichotomum and Monechma incanum.

The essential characteristics of the vegetation of the Molopo Bushveld can be summarised as follows:

- Low tree and shrub diversity: This is in keeping with an observed marked decrease in the diversity of tree and shrub species along an east to west gradient within the Savanna Biome. Accordingly species to area ratio in this part of the Kalahari is less than half the average for the Savanna Biome. The cause of this is the combination of the low erratic summer rainfall, high evapo-transpiration and winter frosts. In such harsh climatic conditions deep soils are needed for trees and shrubs to survive. Thus if the deep sands were not present the tree and shrub diversity of this area would be even lower.

- Low community/habitat diversity: Prior to the impact of cattle farming the vegetation was, according to historical accounts, conspicuously uniform throughout i.e. open woodland dominated by Acacia erioloba and Boscia albitrunca with a low shrub under storey of Grewia flava. The exceptions to this are where Terminalia sericea thickets on patches of deep white sands and the sparsely scattered pans that is virtually devoid of shrubs and trees. This tendency towards vegetation uniformity, and hence a low diversity of vegetation communities and habitats, is due to:
    - The extremely harsh and evenly spread climatic conditions on the one hand
    - Together with the very uniform nature of the topography, altitude, geology and soils, throughout the area.

  Such uniformity is very unlike most other areas in South Africa where high variability of the components of the physical environment (especially soil patchiness) causes high variability in the vegetation pattern and hence high habitat diversity.

- High palatability and nutritional value: Despite the low species and habitat diversity, the vegetation is extremely palatable and nutritious. In sharp contrast to other areas in South Africa almost every tree, shrub and grass species that occur in the Molopo Bushveld are readily grazed or browsed by domestic and wild herbivores alike. This is due to the fertile and alkaline nature of the red Kalahari sands. The end result of this is that, despite the low vegetation diversity of the area, the Molopo Bushveld has the potential to carry a wide variety of large wild herbivores and carnivores.

2.3.1 Summary of the vegetation of Khamab Kalahari Reserve

The KKR consists of three distinct major plant communities with different sub-communities and variants totalling 11 different vegetation-cum-habitat units.

According to Mucina & Rutherford (2006) the vegetation of the study area falls within the Molopo Bushveld (SVk11) also known as Kalahari Plains Thorn Bushveld by Low & Rebelo (1996) with the Southern Kalahari Salt Pans (AZi4) vegetation type comprising small sections within KKR Reserve.

The vegetation of the Molopo Bushveld (SVk11) is described as open woodland and closed shrublands. The trees Acacia erioloba, Boscia albitrunca and Terminalia sericea together with the shrubs Lycium cinerium and Rhigozum trichotomum are characteristic. Dominant grasses include Cenchrus ciliaris, Aristida stipitata, Aristida meridionalis, Eragrostis lehmanniana with common forbs such as Hermannia tomentosa, Limeum fenestrate, Sienna italica, Geigeria ornativa and Hermbstaedtia fleckii. Biogeographically important taxa include the trees Acacia luederitzii var. luederitzii and Acacia haematoxylon and the graminoids Antephora argentia, Megaloprotachne albescens and Panicum kalahariense (Mucina & Rutherford 2006).

Unfortunately large sections of this vegetation type has been degraded due to human actions such as agriculture and intensive tree removal using herbicides that has led to bush densification by plant species such as the tree Acacia mellifera, the shrub Grewia flava, and the forbs Geigeria ornativa and Tribulus terrestris to name a few.

Communities 1 and 2 of the KKR are classified within this vegetation type. Community 1 (Verbesina encelioides-Schmidtia kalahariensis Grassland) is typical of water points and degraded areas (old cattle kraal sites). It occurs as small units scattered throughout the reserve. Some of these areas are bare open patches and should be monitored to prevent the vegetation from overgrazing, while the other areas have relatively good herbaceous cover and provides grazing to animals for short periods. The Grewia retinervis-Acacia erioloba woodland (community 2) comprises the largest section of the reserve. The area is relatively homogeneous and flat with different variants mainly as a result of past management practices. These areas provide good grazing to animals with various important grazing grass species (e.g. Schmidtia pappophoroides, Stipagrostis uniplumis, and Eragrostis lehmanniana) prominent and dominant. No erosion was observed. Large scale herbicide application has unfortunately resulted in a catastrophic decline in woody species and can be seen with the many dead tree trunks remaining only (see photo below).

Although these actions may lead to an increase in grass production in the short term, it eventually leads to total degradation of diverse and species rich ecosystems. Trees and grasses are elements of this ecosystem and if excessive disturbances occur in the one element it will also influence the other. Trees play an important role in the ecosystem where they provide shade and cooler, more moist conditions to grass and other forb species preferring such conditions. Apart from also being a source of food for browsers, they also act as resting and sleeping places for animals and generally have a higher diversity of species growing underneath them. Grasses are important in protecting the soil from erosion and exposure to the environment. They also provide nutrients to the soil due to decomposition of dead material while being the only source of food for grazers. Although there is a constant competition between the grass and tree layer there are also interspecific completion between different tree species as well as between the different grass species themselves. Thus a disturbance in any one of the tree or grass layer will not only have an influence on the grass-tree interaction, but also on grass-grass and tree-tree interactions. That could therefore lead to a complete change in species composition and dominance.

Trees are normally removed to provide improved grazing. If selective removal is affected it could indeed improve the production potential of the veld. However, if large scale non-selective clearing takes place it will lead to an increase in production of the grass layer in the short term due to the higher nutrient conditions of the soil where trees used to be. However, once these nutrient sources have been depleted over a few years the high production grasses will die off quickly only to be permanently replaced by pioneer and low production grasses. At the same time indigenous invasive woody species could easily establish and form dense impenetrable stands leading to a further decline in grass production of the veld.

Many of these changes have been observed within the study area, where various species such as Grewia flava and Acacia mellifera have become prominent in areas where large-scale

tree removal has taken place. The grass layer in these areas has also become very homogeneous with only one or two grass species dominating. Thus a loss in biodiversity has occurred in these areas. Trees also act as refuge areas for different herbaceous species. This has also been observed during the field surveys with most of the different grass and forb species recorded per plot occurring underneath trees and dead tree trunks.

It therefore seems as though the previous large-scale tree removal did negatively affect some areas of the reserve. However, the fact that no intensive grazing has taken place for many years has allowed some areas to show signs of recovery. Large areas typical of Acacia erioloba-Boscia albitrunca veld are still present with higher species richness than the bush cleared areas.

The Southern Kalahari Salt Pans (AZi4) comprises low grasslands on pan bottoms and are sometimes devoid of vegetation (Mucina & Rutherford 2006). These pans are located on sandy sediments of the Cenozoic Kalahari Group and consist of sandy loam sand with a high calcium and phosphate content. These pans are exposed to the environment for the largest part of the year with water present only for short periods in the rainy season (Mucina & Rutherford 2006). Some larger pans do however keep water for longer period, but the pans are mostly shallow.

These pans are all present within the reserve and add to the diversity and species richness of the area. No signs of overutilization or degradation were observed during the surveys and the vegetation is typical of the vegetation type.

2.3.2 Species lists

The list of species identified during the vegetation surveys are presented in Appendix 1.

2.4 Disturbed or degraded areas such as bush encroachment and soil erosion

As a result of the flat topography and sandy soils into which water quickly infiltrates, as well as a good vegetation cover, soil erosion from both water and wind is largely absent from the reserve.

See the detailed description of degraded areas as a result of the use of herbicides to control bush encroachment in the past as described above in the summary of the vegetation.

SECTION B: MANAGEMENT GOALS AND OBJECTIVES

3 CONSERVATION ON KHAMAB KALAHARI RESERVE

Khamab was established in 2007 as a private venture in the Molopo district of the Eastern Kalahari Bushveld. It started with several properties being bought and amalgamated into a single property which is fenced with electrified game/bonnox fencing around the entire outside perimeter of 230km, with all the internal fences removed. The result is a property of just over 90 000ha which is completely open for animals to roam freely.

The size of the property makes it the biggest conservation area in the Northwest province by some margin, and in that regard Khamab plays a key role in conservation in the Northwest province. KKR's size means that it conserves a significant portion of the Eastern Kalahari Bushveld.

The vision, mission and key objectives of Khamab Kalahari Reserve is given below, emphasising the commitment of the reserve to conservation as well as highlighting that conservation is the only objective of the reserve (Collinson & Brett 2007).

3.1 Khamab Vision, Mission and objectives

3.1.1 Vision

The vision for KKR is to create a game reserve that:

- Comprises unspoilt landscapes and habitats that visually typify the Kalahari Bushveld.
- Sustains the full spectrum of African wild herbivores and carnivores that naturally occurred in such landscapes/habitats in the past.
- Enables the ecological processes of the system to function with as little management intervention as possible.

3.1.2 Mission

In realising this vision, KKR's mission is to establish a conservation icon that is held in high esteem both nationally and internationally for its positive contribution to wildlife conservation and the community at large.

3.1.3 Key Objectives

KKR's mission will be accomplished through the achievement of the following key objectives:

- Re-establish and sustain viable populations of the full spectrum of wild herbivore and predator species that occurred naturally in the Kalahari Bushveld in the past by undertaking a scientifically based reintroduction program and thereafter applying sound conservation practices
- Attain a high level of success in the conservation of endangered species such as black rhino, cheetah, wild dog and birds of prey by conducting comprehensive research programs and state of the art conservation management
- Eliminate those plant and animal species that are deemed to be alien to this bioregion or for other reasons ethically unacceptable including domestic livestock

- Rehabilitate the Kalahari Bushveld landscape to resemble its former natural state by removing all signs of the visually unappealing structures of past farming and other land use and land development practices
- Restore/simulate the natural ecological processes (e.g. fire frequency, surface water distribution, migration, herbivory and predation) and vegetation pattern/composition of the Kalahari Bushveld that have been disrupted/depleted/distorted by past farming practices.

Therefore, in striving to achieve these key objectives described above, the primary reason for keeping lions on Khamab is to have the full spectrum of carnivores that occurred in this landscape in the past. Coupled with this is to allow the ecological processes of the system to function with as little intervention as possible, of which lions as top predator should play a vital role.

3.2 Conservation partnerships and memberships

As captured in the vision of the reserve, Khamab wants to make a positive contribution to the conservation of wildlife and ecological processes, and hence the commitment to contribute to conservation at all levels. This includes the conservation of endangered species like wild dog (Lycaon pictus), cheetah (Acinonyx jubatus) and black rhino (Diceros bicornis).

In this regards Khamab participate and partners in the following conservation groups:

- Wilddog Advisory Group
- National Cheetah Metapopulation
- Lion Management Forum (LiMF) – one of the founding members

3.6 Waterhole distribution policy

The general belief amongst wildlife managers in South Africa is that "the more water points provided, the more productive the wildlife and the healthier the vegetation". Put another way it is widely believed that many closely spaced water points is the universal remedy for achieving wildlife conservation objectives. This belief is unfortunately based on "intuition" rather than "good science". As a consequence of this much money and time is spent on the development and maintenance of permanent water points when it could have been spent better on other. In opposition to this "intuitive" approach, a "good science" approach to permanent surface water provision has been slowly gaining acceptance over the past two decades. For example it is now firmly entrenched in Kruger National Park – South Africa's premier protected area – as the outcome of some bitter lessons learnt along the way viz. declines in rare species numbers, undesirable eruptions in elephant numbers and bush encroachment due to the past practice a dense network of permanent water points throughout the Park. This gradual move to a "good science" approach has also been influenced by experience gained in semi-arid areas elsewhere - including both wildlife and domestic livestock grazing systems - where permanent water point provision was based on intuition rather than science. (Collinson and Brett, 2007) .

The effect that the distribution of surface water has on heterogeneity and ecological processes in a system is better understood, and is starting to play a much bigger role in how ecosystems are managed. The use of surface water by animals influences faunal distribution patterns across a range of spatial scales like landscape patterns. This is largely attributed to how different species utilise space at various distances from water sources. Some animals like gemsbok and eland would not need close association with water sources, while others like impala, buffalo and elephant would have a much closer association with available water sources. This in turn will influence species like lion, which tend to associate more with water sources, and how they impact on prey populations (Gaylard et al 2003)

Water distribution will also create community level patterns. These patterns that are influenced by surface water availability and distribution include direct changes to faunal compositional diversity and changes brought about indirectly by changing the frequency or intensity of ecosystem processes such as competition. An example of this is the requirements of diverse habitats necessary for the coexistence of the spectrum of carnivores, where cheetah prefers more open tree savanna and wild dog more densely wooded areas. Extensive water provision will lead to homogenization of the landscape vegetation structure, which in turn threatens the coexistence of carnivores (Gaylard et al 2003)

As said, surface water distribution will influence vegetation patterns on a landscape as well as ecosystem and population levels. On a landscape level the water distribution influence the landscape mosaic of vegetation condition and type, for example the influence that elephants or some intensive grazer will have on vegetation closer to water sources. On an ecosystem level water distribution will influence the formation of piosphere effects around water sources, where the increasing distance away from water source tend to decrease the density of the woody component and an increase in the grass component. The quantity and quality of the herbaceous community tends to improve with distance away from a water source (Gaylard et al 2003)

From these lessons learnt the challenge for KKR is to approach the provision of artificial water points for game in a way that is in accord with its vision and the foundation for the achievement of its objectives (Section B Point 3.1).

Very few reserves have the space available to implement this strategy with regards to water distribution. KKR does have enough space and are in the position to implement this management strategy.

When the reserve was started, there were more than 100 water points on KKR, and the distance between these points is in most cases were less than 5 km, giving a maximum foraging distance from water of 2.5 km. They were maintained by pumping and piping from boreholes. Prior to the acquisition of the land for establishing KKR, the primary purpose of these water points was to provide drinking water for cattle. On a few properties they provided for game animals.

From lessons learnt from the Kruger Park "learning by doing experiment" and from similar experiences elsewhere, it was recognised that KKR's conservation vision and objectives (as described elsewhere) would certainly not have been realised if the permanent water points on KKR were maintained in place as they existed at the time and that the prevailing water points had to be drastically reduced in number and realigned in cognisance of the ecological principles implied in the management objectives and modern thinking with regards to water distribution as described earlier.

Accordingly, the plan for the KKR was to reduce the number of permanent water points to a total of 8 and locate them as indicated in the configuration presented in Figure 13 below.

However, some of these old waterholes are being kept as temporary waterholes that can be used in the event of very severe droughts to provide water points in areas far from the permanent water points where some forage may still be in existence. To provide for such exceptional circumstances, five such water points and associated infrastructure (equipped boreholes, pipelines) will be maintained in a dormant state but in good working order.

In deciding on the number and configuration of permanent water points for KKR the following was taken into account:

- If restoration/simulation/maintenance of ecological processes was the sole objective of KKR then the ideal water point configuration would be either:
  - A single water point situated in the centre of the game reserve; or
  - A line of water points in the north that simulates a linear source of surface water - as would have been the case during the times when the Molopo River was perennial.
- However, to carry populations of water dependant species that are large enough for sustaining genetic viability, this ideal configuration will not suffice – especially for elements of the big 5 such as lion, elephant, buffalo and rhino
- Sustaining these species is an essential element of KKR's vision as well as for achieving the secondary objective (strategy) of creating meaningful economic activity on KKR through tourism and trophy hunting
- Furthermore, for tourism to be successful it is preferable to have more water points (and hence more localised concentrations of animals) spread over a wider geographic area than that of the ideal configuration – but with the rider that water points still need to be widely spaced from each other so as to encourage these desirable localised concentrations of animals from game viewing i.e. the number and spacing of water points needs to be optimised
- This desired optimum configuration of water points for tourism is also of great benefit for reducing territorial conflict (especially black rhino) and conflict between carnivore prides/packs (especially lions and wild dogs).
- While from a tourism perspective it is ideal to place water points on pans it is important from a species diversity perspective to leave a large number of pans free of permanent water i.e. water independent species (springbok, gemsbok, hartebeest) are highly reliant on pans for grazing and when permanent water is provided on pans these water independent species have to compete with water dependent species for this grazing
- Water points were moved away from fences as far as possible to reduce the density of prey animals along the fence and the possible associated effect of predators regularly chasing prey into fence lines
- One pan was kept on a large pan to provide the spectacular views associated with large numbers of animals on a large open pan
- Pans were positioned on natural depressions or very small pans (panlets)

On the basis of the above, the number and configuration of permanent water points indicated in Figure 13 represents what is considered to be a balanced compromise between competing objectives and strategies for the start-up phase. The merits of this compromise will then be evaluated over time by the process of adaptive management. In the meantime this start up configuration will be strictly maintained in place and only considered for modification if the evaluation of monitoring feedback clearly indicates that objectives and strategies are not being achieved – and that this is clearly a consequence of the behaviour of populations and processes not conforming to the assumptions discussed earlier.

Waterholes were kept as natural as possible to simulate ephemeral water sources that are found in these depressions after rainstorms, albeit permanent in this case. Where these depressions were very sandy, clay from the Molopo River was used to seal these depressions to create waterholes. This provides a natural feel to the waterhole, as well as provide place for animals to roll, as well as provide habitat for frogs etc. See the photographs below of the water points on Khamab

There are no permanent open water on KKR, so these waterholes are all pumped from boreholes through and extensive pipe network system.

3.7 Fire management

Fire is a common disturbance in many terrestrial ecosystems, where it consumes enormous quantities of biomass. In Africa savannas, fire, climatic variability, soils, and large herbivores interact to shape the vegetation, driving spatial and temporal heterogeneity across the landscape. Fire affects the plant communities through large scale, episodic removal of biomass and the delivery, in some cases, of lethal temperatures to plant materials. It has been described as a large generalist herbivore (Bond 1997) that sometimes competes with, sometimes replaces, and sometimes facilitates herbivory. Many studies have shown that the exclusion of fire from savannas leads to an increase in woody biomass, and this has been interpreted that fires are essential for the persistence of savannas. However, in dry environments the exclusion of fire does not lead to the formation of forests, but rather to a denser form of savanna (Van Wilgen and Scholes 1997). Almost all plant species in arid savannas are able to survive repeated, frequent burning largely by resprouting. Pockets dominated by fire-intolerant species are not a feature of the landscape. Debates on the role of fire in such savannas therefore focus not on the conservation of fire-sensitive species but rather on their role in promoting dominance by certain species over others. Grass-tree coexistence may be made possible by separation of rooting niches, with trees having sole access to water in deeper soil horizons, and grasses having preferential access to, and being superior competitors for, water in the surface soil horizons.

Veld burning in conservation areas has for decades been, and still are, a contentious aspect of the management of southern African vegetation for three basic reasons. Fire is an obvious ecosystem driver (Walker 1987); there are important gaps in our understanding about the actual effects of fire including the interactive effects together with other factors such as herbivory (Bond 1997); and multiple practical fire management options appear to be available to managers (Bradstock et al. 1998). These three factors imply that managers realise the importance of fire, feel the need to choose between options to manage it, but acknowledge that the decisions are currently being taken on imperfect knowledge.

Natural fires as a result of lightning played an important role in the development of ecosystems in Africa (Biggs 2004), and the fire climax grasslands and the savanna areas owe their very nature to their long history of fire which has apparently played such an important role in their development. One area of continuing debate is the understanding of the role of early man in shaping the landscape with fire, as contrasted to a hands-off wilderness management. Modern human impact has grossly affected the historic natural fire pattern, or pattern which could reasonably be expected to prevail had human population growth and cultural practice not changed so rapidly and dramatically (Braack 1997). Humans have created roads, firebreaks, cultivated areas etc. which serves as barriers for the spread of fires over large areas. Also the tendency of modern humans to see fires as "destructive" and "bad" led to natural fires that were put out too often, probably resulting in more "damage" to the ecology than would have happened if the fires were left to burn.

Scientists realised that fire was a key determinant of savanna ecosystems and one of a suite of drivers that influence ecosystem dynamics and heterogeneity (Van Wilgen et al 2003). However, the interpretation of this influence resulted in managers applying very rigid and fixed regimes, burning areas at the same time of the year and at the same interval. Research has now shown that this have a negative influence on biodiversity by favouring those species with a life cycle better adapted to the specific burning regime. Also, a believe that fires are only good during a certain time of the year also led to some loss in biodiversity. Contemporary ecological thinking emphasizes the importance of disturbance processes in maintaining the composition and structure of savanna ecosystems, and fire is recognised as the most important disturbance process of all.

The Kalahari probably didn't see many anthropogenic fires as the original inhabitants of this land were San people, who were hunter/gatherers and not herdsman, and therefore would have no reason to start veld fires to provide grazing for their livestock. All it would have achieved was to burn away resources, which they could ill afford.

Given the high number of lightning strikes reported for the Kalahari area, it is reasonable to assume that historically fires would have been an important factor in maintaining ecosystem function in the region. It can probably also be safely assumed that in the past there was probably little permanent animal impact on the vegetation of the Kalahari due to a lack of open water, and that fires would have been an important factor in the productivity and stability of the plant communities of the Kalahari in the past, although there were relatively few (Scholes et. al 2002). Dougill and Cox (2003) suggests that the introduction of domestic livestock to the Kalahari has been accompanied by significant changes in the rangeland ecology, reflected most obviously in a shift from herbaceous to woody plant species. The exact mechanisms behind this remain unclear, and it remains uncertain whether the vegetation changes are a direct response to increased grazing pressure, or whether they reflect more fundamental changes in ecosystem function. Observations in some studies suggest that bush encroachment can be explained solely by the interactions between livestock pressure and abiotic environmental conditions, in particular rainfall variability and fire frequency. The significance of the applicability of the fire and herbivory explanations of bush encroachment is, they suggest, that vegetation changes are reversible.

Sources of historical occurrence of fires in the Kalahari system are limited, but Van der Walt and Le Riche (1984) said that fires in 1934, 1968 and 1974/5 were recorded for the southern Kalahari (nowadays Kgalagadi National Park), but that in the northern Kalahari with a rainfall of 500mm+ that fires burn every year. They only occur in large intervals in the semi-arid southern Kalahari (Jeltcsh et al 1997), but their effect is of considerable importance.

It is important to realise that fire in extensive natural settings is so varied under different circumstances, and these specifications sufficiently flexible, as to give management considerable freedom of judgement in implementing the intended achievement of the goals. Indeed, a more rigid programme is likely not to succeed in achieving biodiversity aims. Therefore, understanding the background and intention is crucial and management should not be criticised for consequences which may arise founded on good or even reasonable judgement on their part, in the rare events when unexpected changes of, for instance, weather conditions, lead to large fires. As mentioned this is a learn-by-doing approach, but if implemented correctly can be hugely positive for the conservation of biodiversity on Khamab Kalahari Reserve.

3.8 Rehabilitation programme for degraded areas

As described earlier in the discussion and conclusion of the vegetation description in Point 2.4.4, the degradation on KKR is limited to the widespread killing of trees due to non-selective bush clearing with chemicals (tebuthiuron) by aerial application in the past. This practice occurred over large areas of the reserve, and is still continuing in large areas of the Molopo district today. Unfortunately there is no rehabilitation that can be done that can rehabilitate these areas to what they formerly were. The chemicals need to work itself out of the system over time. Due to the slow growing nature of trees like Acacia erioloba and Boscia albitrunca, it will take a long time for the bush to recover to its natural state, even after all the chemicals have disappeared from the system. However, good veld management practices and prevention of overgrazing will assist the recovery, as stated by Brown & Bezuidenhout (2010).

Some areas of bush encroachment are present on KKR, mostly areas that have been overgrazed in the past and where no chemical bush clearing has been done. If encroachment occurs on areas where non-selective chemical bush clearing have been done in the past, both the woody and herbaceous components tend to become homogenous, resulting in a loss of biodiversity (pers. obs). Also, the bush tends to recover in thick stands of indigenous bush, eventually resulting in a loss of grass. Where the bush becomes encroached in areas that has never been cleared, or selectively cleared, it stills lead do a decrease in the grass layer, however, but the biodiversity in these areas is still high.

Areas of bush encroachment make up a small percentage of the surface area of KKR, and bush clearing is not of prime importance at the moment. The emphasis should rather be on restoring the natural mechanisms and processes that keep the balance between the woody and grass layer.
These processes include the placement of waterholes according to scientific principles (as described earlier in the document), the implementation and use of fire in the system, as well as ensuring an herbivory component that is in balance with its resources. Grazers have an important distal influence on the composition structure and pattern of savannah vegetation, while herbivory by browsers (especially elephant and black rhino) can also have a profound and more proximate influence. The introduction of elephant in the system will therefore assist and play a valuable part in restoring the natural processes that regulate the interactions between the grass and tree components.

The results of the vegetation monitoring programme, as discussed in detail earlier, will determine extent to which the above veld management interventions (herbivory, veld burning) contain and reverse bush encroachment – especially the vigorous coppice that occurs following bush clearing efforts by the previous land owners. Should the monitoring feedback indicate that the fire interventions are not having the desired effect then bush clearing interventions will be considered according to the following guidelines:

- No bush clearing will be done within a 5km radius from permanent water points
- Beyond this radius, bush clearing will focus on the coppice of previously cleared areas i.e. already encroached areas within this zone will be left untouched
- Aerial applications of chemicals will only be considered as a bush clearing technique in very localised areas

- Chopping by hand and spot spraying directly on the plant will be considered as will the use of contractors

3.9 Population management of other wildlife species

As described earlier in Section B in KKR's vision, it is stated the vision of Khamab is to allow the ecological processes to function with as little management intervention as possible. Therefore the management of other wildlife species will be kept to the minimum, as far as possible.

Predator numbers on the reserve are still establishing (some predator species like spotted hyena has not been introduced yet), and have not yet reached levels where they can exert a large enough impact on the prey population to prevent it from growing to levels outside the limits of acceptable change. The ecological management approach with regards to water distribution, fire, herbivory and predation as described above has not been fully realised yet, and it will take some time for all the processes to develop to an extent where they will keep animal populations inside the established limits of acceptable change.

To avoid overgrazing of the veld until predator numbers reach a level where they will start to exert pressure on prey population, large numbers of gemsbok, eland, blue wildebeest and zebra has been sold in 2012, 2013 & 2014, with another removal planned for 2015. These animals are captured through live capture by a game capture operator.

The number of animals that are sold through live capture gets determined after the annual aerial game census, where the whole reserve is counted systematically over a period of 7 days. Also taken into consideration are the known animals that are killed by predators during the year, and extrapolated for the whole predator population. This will be done up to a point where enough data has been collected through monitoring to accurately determine the impact of predators on prey.

The limits of acceptable change (see the discussion in Point 3.10.1 below) will constantly be evaluated based on the outcome of the vegetation monitoring programme. If the impact of the herbivore population is found to cross the lower limits of acceptable change, the population will be reduced and the lower acceptable level adapted to levels as indicated by the monitoring programme.

Predators also fall under the same approach, and the vision of as little management intervention as possible also applies to predators. We know, and information from other game reserves indicate likewise, that predator-prey relationships are complex processes that are not easy to understand, and the balance between predator and prey are not easy to establish. A lot of reserves struggle to find that balance, and are often ham struck with objectives that does not allow them the freedom to let processes continue a little longer in search of the point where the natural control mechanisms start to come to the fore (Millet et al 2013). On KKR the approach would be to only intervene if predation reaches levels where it crosses levels of acceptable change and from which prey populations are unlikely to recover.

3.10 Preferred herbivore density

3.10.1 Carrying Capacity

The concept of 'carrying capacity' is rather nebulous and consequently it has been defined in many ways. An essentially loose definition of the concept in an ecological context is:

"The number of animals that the habitat/vegetation of a given area can safely carry/maintain in the long term without risk of habitat degradation and species extinction"

In a commercial production context a more appropriate definition would be as follows:

"The number of animals that the habitat/vegetation of a given area can carry/maintain in a sustained long term productive state or a state that maximizes long term sustained yields"

In arid areas such as KKR with unpredictable variable rainfall patterns, and hence highly variable vegetation production from season to season, there is no such thing as a static or fixed carrying capacity. Instead the so called carrying capacity in reality is something that fluctuates widely and unpredictably over time. In these circumstances the usefulness of the concept becomes highly questionable with respect to herbivore management decision making for KKR.

Thus, in the context of KKR it is better to manage and make decisions in accordance with a range of so called carrying capacity estimates with upper and lower limits (i.e. limits of acceptable change). In this context carrying capacity estimates have some use at the start-up phase in providing the "pointers" within this range or the "ball park" estimates for placing start up stocking rates within the range. Furthermore, in the absence of any exact science basis for determining this range of estimates the following approaches were adopted in this report (Collinson & Brett, 2007):

- According to the knowledge and experience of local farmers and herbivore ranchers the overall herbivore carrying capacity for the Molopo area is:
  - 1AU/10 ha in good to average rainfall years[1]*
  - Much lower than this for drought years
  - 1AU/20ha if the aim is to adopt a cautious approach that minimizes the risk of die offs in drought years
- The current herbivore stocking rates of the nearby Molopo Game Reserve were then compared with the figures provided above by local farmers and they were found to concur i.e. during the current good rainfall years the total stocking rate has been sustainably maintained at 1AU/12 ha

Footnote: [1] An AU (Animal Unit) is a standard animal with a mass of 454 kg which is used as a standard measure in carrying capacity estimates. Different species with different body masses are then assigned AU equivalent on the basis of this standard e.g. Conventionally in South Africa, carrying capacity has been expressed as the number of hectares required to support an AU (ha/AU or AU/ha). Recently, the use of an AU as a standard measure in the carrying capacity estimates has come under criticism due to the fact that it has several shortcomings. The critics of the use AU as the standard measure recommend biomass (with kg as the unit) as a preferred alternative. Nevertheless, due to its familiarity in the South African context this report has persisted with the AU concept.*

- More scientific general equations (using average annual rainfall and soil fertility parameters) for estimating carrying capacity provide figures ranging from 1AU/10ha to 1AU/30ha for a mean annual rainfall of 320mm

3.10.2 Limits of Acceptable Change

Having established a carrying capacity range and start-up stocking rate guidelines, and in keeping with KKR's vision and mission (allow ecological processes to function with minimal management intervention), herbivore management, after the start-up phase, needs to be conducted as follows:

- The total overall stocking rate of established herbivore species should be allowed to fluctuate between an upper limit of 1AU/10ha and a lower limit of 1AU/30ha
- Apart from rare and/or valuable species, management interventions such as removals, predator control, feeding, veterinary treatment, supplementary introductions etc. should only be undertaken if herbivore populations fluctuate to such an extreme that they increase or decrease outside the range of these limits. (Note that with this approach, some die offs of common species during droughts would need to be tolerated in keeping with the vision/mission)
- For rare and/or valuable species such as black rhino, white rhino, and buffalo a far more hands on management approach would be required. In this respect, intervention including selling off of surplus animals (before food becomes scarce), feeding in times of drought and veterinary treatment would be major challenges for achieving maximum productivity through low mortality and high birth rates.

4 BASE FOR DEVELOPING A LION MANAGEMENT PLAN

4.1 Background to lion management on small reserves

As prelude to the lion management plan, let us look deeper into the typical breakdown of natural population factors that happen in small enclosed reserves.

Naturally lions live in groups or prides in order to defend territories from other groups, or to defend cubs from roaming males and/or males wanting to take over prides (Miller et al 2013). The typical situation on small fenced reserves is that there is often no roaming males, or sometimes no other prides and/or roaming groups. As a result there is no pressure for prides to stay intact, often leading to complete disintegration of pride structures. This in turn affects predator-prey relationships because the impact of several individuals and/or small groups of lions making multiple kills is bigger than the case with more stable prides making less kills, even if the total number of lions on the reserve is similar.

The typical situation on small reserves is that male coalition take-overs are a scarce occurrence, which is the prime reason for cub mortality in natural populations (Miller et al 2013). Pride males often stay with a particular pride for many years, sometimes leading to inbreeding when these males start mating with their daughters, reducing the genetic variability of the population.

Lion populations on small reserves often have a lower age of first breeding, shorter breeding intervals and larger litter sizes than their counterparts in natural populations (Miller & Funston 2014). This is probably partly management induced, but there are also arguments for the theory that because of the absence of roaming males and more prides, there are less social and resource stress in the populations. Increasing social and resource stress results in females loosing body condition, which in turn could affect fecundity. It could lead to females breeding at a later age, as well as less often.

Furthermore, management actions like culling or regular removals as ways of controlling population numbers can have the opposite effect in that it increases population growth rates (Miller et al. 2013). The reason for this is that it does not mimic natural population drivers, but are more similar to removals from a population due to natural disasters. When a population is under pressure from natural disasters, for example recovery after a disease outbreak, it can often respond by increasing its growth rate.

4.2 Objectives of lion management on Khamab Kalahari Reserve

Lion management on Khamab should strive to:

- manage the lion population in such a way that they form part of Khamab's vision by seeing them as an ecological process that should function with as little management intervention as possible
- keep the lion numbers within the levels of acceptable change, allowing for natural fluctuations in population size, and ensuring that they do not reach levels where the prey populations are unable to recover from
- allow natural population regulation mechanisms to play a role in the maintenance of the lion population
- keep the genetic integrity of the population intact
- to ensure that lion population does not grow to levels where the continued existences of endangered predators like wild dog and cheetah are in jeopardy
- minimize the prevalence of diseases in the lion population

- make Khamab a leading role-player in lion conservation community regarding the management of lions on small reserves
- contribute to lion conservation as a whole by participating in a lion meta-population management approach as suggested by the Lion Management Forum ("LiMF")
- minimize lion/human conflict situations

4.3 Principles incorporated in the lion management plan

System based approaches to conservation management include at least one of the following elements: allowing natural processes to play out, restoring ecological processes or mimicking the outcomes of ecological processes.

In line with the Khamab Kalahari Reserve's Vision, Mission and Key objectives, lion management on Khamab should primarily allow natural processes to play themselves out, as far as possible. However, realities and experience on small to medium sized, fenced reserves, have indicated that, although good to aim for, are not viable in practice, and that management intervention needs to be more intense, especially when managing a large carnivore like lion.

Therefore, the management plan must primarily attempt to restore ecological processes that control lion populations. Secondary it should aim to, in conjunction with the restoration, mimic social factors that impact on lion population control, rather than direct management actions based upon carrying capacity approaches.

Keeping in mind the reason for the breakdown of natural processes as described earlier, the natural population control mechanisms that can be restored or mimicked are:

- More prides
- Roaming males
- Coalition take over and infanticide
- Age of first and last breeding
- Litter intervals
- Litter sizes

4.3.1 Restoring ecological processes

In order to allow for natural mechanisms of population control, Khamab should aim to have at least two or three prides on the reserve, and possibly more depending on how the lion population develops. There should then be at least one roaming male coalition per pride to add social pressure on the population. As summarised earlier, increasing social pressure could potentially lead to increase in litter intervals and decrease in litter sizes.

More roaming male coalitions could potentially lead to more regular natural coalition take-overs, and this should be allowed to happen. In case natural take-overs do not occur, due to several factors, this should be mimicked by removing pride males regularly by live removal (providing other reserves with males or swopping males with other reserves) or hunting. Pride males should be allowed to ideally have two (or maximum three breeding cycles) and then be removed, or a natural pride take over should be encouraged by allowing competitor males to come through the ranks or being introduced.

This approach is new in lion conservation and as far as knowledge stretch, has not been implemented on any small fenced reserve in South Africa. Although the theory behind this are sound, the effect of this on a small population is still unknown. This approach therefore needs close monitoring and regular scrutiny with regards to its effectiveness. The potential of this is widely recognised at the Lion Management Forum (LiMF), but because of the practical implications, especially in small reserves, is not that easy implement. The size of Khamab may make it more viable as a management tool than on the majority of other reserves in South Africa.

4.3.2 Mimicking of natural control mechanisms

If results from the above approach do not prove to be successful, ways to mimic the natural population regulation mechanisms can be introduced. This should ideally be done in combination with the above approach, and only under extreme circumstances be introduced as an "exclusive" option.

By carefully incorporating contraceptives as part of a lion management approach, it can fulfil a valuable role in mimicking natural control mechanisms. As described earlier, the age of first breeding, inter-litter intervals and age of last breeding can be controlled with the use of contraceptives. Here they can be used to increase the age of first breeding and increase litter intervals, and reduce the age of last breeding to be more in line with natural patterns as described earlier.

Contraception should be used with care. There have been some negative effects on population dynamics of lions reported when contraception has been used as a management tool for example prides splitting up, lionesses becoming over weight and sometimes unable to come into oestrus again . Although this is based circumstantial evidence on not documented literature, there are enough reports on this to probably have a certain amount of truth to it, even though not documented scientifically. Contraceptives should only be used in a way that will mimic natural population control mechanisms, and should not be used in a blanket approach in the population. In natural populations it is very unlikely that a number of females in a population will be without cubs for extended periods of time and this very unnatural approach should therefore not be induced by the use of contraceptives. However, if contraceptives are used carefully and as part of a well thought out management approach, can be an effective tool in controlling lion population growth. Like with restoring ecological processes, monitoring should be done to test the affectivity of mimicking these factors, as well as picking up any negative consequences of this approach.

Litter sizes could potentially be reduced by a current experimental procedure of unilateral tube tying. This is a surgical procedure where one tube of the uterus of the lioness gets tied or removed, which mean that fewer cubs can be conceived. Some reserves have started to use it, and the effectiveness of this procedure in natural conditions is still unknown, although it worked well in zoo situations. However, it does show some huge promise as a way of reducing population growth rate. Although it invasive and requires surgical intervention which can be expensive, it is a once-off cost, where after there are not regular interventions with the specific lioness, and in the long term probably the better option.

4.4 Management considerations in the management plan

4.4.1 Excess lions and population control

Lion numbers on Khamab should only be reduced if the lion population on Khamab reaches a level where it prevents the reaching of objectives of the reserve as a whole, or the specific objectives of the lion management plan.

However any decisions to reduce or control the population should be made with care and only if it proves that objectives cannot be achieved as a result of a larger lion population.

Several options are available for population control of the lion population: live removals to other reserves, hunting of specific individuals, culling (euthanasia) and contraception.

a. The options to remove live animals for introduction to other reserves have decreased dramatically of the past few years. The majority of reserves in South Africa belief that their lion populations are too large, and are looking for translocation opportunities. There is an oversupply of free-roaming lions from game reserves, so finding an outlet for lions for translocation will not be easy. However, this should be the preferred method if young animals need to be removed, and should be attempted first before other options are considered.

   If males in their prime need to be removed for genetic purposes (see below), they should be considered for swopping for other males (see below) from other suitable and credible reserves.

b. If specific adult individuals needs to be removed for whatever reason, and it is impossible to remove them alive, they should be considered for hunting. However, individuals that are part of a stable pride should not be hunted while in the presence of the pride. Hunting should only be applied as a simulation of a natural population process, and not as a means of generating income.

   Old males that have reached the end of their lives can be considered for hunting. Males in their prime can also be considered for hunting if there is no need to introduce new genes by swopping with other reserves (see above), or if there are no other reserves that form part of LiMF (see below) who are looking for lions for introduction.

   In small populations there are often single lionesses with a tendency to move off and spend most of their time on their own. Although un-documented, previous experience indicates that the offspring from such lioness show similar tendencies later in life. These animals are often shy, don't get seen often, and therefore don't contribute much to the game viewing experience. However, they add considerably to predation impact. In order to promote pride structures once the population and prides have established, these animals should be removed, preferably alive by translocation to other reserves. This strategy should be monitored for its effectiveness, and will hopefully contribute to more stable pride structures.

c. Euthanasia (culling) can be used in exceptional circumstances if the above options have been explored and if no alternative solutions can be found. However, because of the controversial perceptions of euthanasia, it should be done with the utmost care. Animals should not be euthanized in the presence of other individuals that are not earmarked for euthanasia. The best method of euthanasia is to first dart and immobilize all animals earmarked for euthanasia, remove them from the area, and then to kill them while they are asleep.

   Euthanasia of cubs is both a very sensitive topic, as well as hard on the person that needs to do it. In natural lion populations, low survival rate of cubs is one of the prime natural population control processes that appear to break down in small, fenced lion populations. In terms of simulating natural control mechanisms, euthanasia of cubs could be a good way of achieving the objective.

However, as with other euthanasia described above, this should not be done in presence of the mother or other pride members. Furthermore, not all the cubs from a littler should be euthanized. By leaving at least one cub, it will prevent the lioness from going into estrus immediately.
As mentioned, the euthanasia of cubs is extremely controversial, and should be debated openly and honestly by the Khamab management team.

d. Euthanasia should not be adopted as a rule as a quick fix, but underlying problems that cause over-population should be addressed as far as possible.

e. The use of contraceptives to control population numbers has been described in more detail earlier. Contraceptives should be used with care in a well thought out management approach.

4.4.2 Genetic integrity

In open systems genetic integrity is ensured through normal social behavior of lions, but these mechanisms often gets broken down in small populations. As a result some reserves with small lions populations face inbreeding issues, which is often amplified by management actions like euthanasia, contraception etc. However, by mimicking natural control mechanism and social behavior as described above, inbreeding problems are unlikely to occur on Khamab. However, whenever a lion needs to be darted for the first time for whatever reason, genetic samples should be taken and send for analysis to continuously monitor the genetic integrity of the population. If test results show indications of continuous decrease in genetic variability and integrity, serious steps to introduce new genetic material should be made as soon as possible. This can largely be achieved by participation in a meta-population management approach as described later in this document.

4.4.3 Disease and general health

Diseases play important roles in the functioning of natural systems, whether it is to control population numbers or maintenance of genetic diversity. It is therefore often important in natural systems that diseases dynamics play out in order to increase ecological heterogeneity. However, in small and/or fenced populations, it is important that managers think through the potential impacts of diseases carefully. Some diseases can severely deplete or in some cases completely exterminate a small population. And in a fenced reserve as an "island" there is no opportunity for natural re-colonization of the population. The establishment of the populations often came with lots of effort and financial implications, and it would therefore be ill advised to let certain diseases play itself out.

However, it also doesn't make sense to contracept or euthanize lions to prevent the population from getting too large, and then on the other hand also vaccinate to protect lions from diseases.

To not remove the important role that diseases play in the functioning of the system completely, it will therefor make sense to vaccinate core individuals only. This will allow diseases to still play a role in controlling the population, but will prevent the complete removal of the whole population as a result of the disease. However, vaccination should not be seen as a must do, and it is up to KKR management to decide on the necessity of vaccination.

Key diseases of lions to look out for are canine distemper virus (CDV), bovine tuberculosis (BTB), rabies and feline immunodeficiency (FIV). Some of these diseases has the potential to kill a large percentage or exterminate the population, and should be avoided where possible. Furthermore, some of the diseases like BTB and rabies has the potential to spread into other animal populations as well, and should therefore be avoided. FIV seems to be present in most lion populations, and should not be a serious concern, but should be monitored.

Whenever lions get darted for whatever reason, blood samples should be taken and analyzed for these diseases if possible. The skin test for BTB has not been perfected for predators, and need boma time and follow up tests. It should not be a concern unless new animals are brought in from the Lowveld or KZN regions.

However, diseases that affect single animals and with a low probability to spread in the population should not be a concern. If animals do get infected by some means, they should not be treated unless it is an animal that has value for a particular reason, for example a new introduction for genetic reasons.

Similar rules should be used for injuries etc., even if it is life threatening. If it is an animal that doesn't have a high genetic value, or high potential economic value, these animals should be allowed to either die naturally as a result from the injury, or to recover naturally on its own. Lions have a remarkable ability to recover from what we as humans see as serious injuries, and even broken legs etc. have the ability to recover well. Managers often over-react to injuries on lions, but each case should be evaluated on its own merits.

4.4.4 Conflict with other predators

It is known that lion can have a large impact on con-specific predators, in specific wild dogs, cheetahs and brown hyena. However, some of the other smaller predators are also killed by lions, although unlikely to such an extent that it will threaten the existence of the small predators.
It was reported in some reserves that the populations of wild dog and cheetah were virtually killed to extinction on some reserves by lions, while on others the impact appears to be less severe.

However, both these species also have the ability to increase in numbers quickly, and as a result can have a high impact on the prey populations on a reserve. Lions serve as an important population control mechanism in natural systems.

Therefore, it must be accepted that lions will kill a significant number of other predators, and this must be allowed without interference. However, the status of small predators needs to be monitored closely, particularly for impact of lion killings on the population. Cheetah and wild dog are more endangered than lion, and therefore should have a higher conservation status on the reserve than lions. Khamab should aim to contribute to the conservation of both these species by providing excess animals for relocation to other reserves.

Only if it appears that the lion population will cause local extinction of any of the smaller predators should it be a concern, and should measures be implemented to combat this.

4.4.5 Effect on biodiversity/prey populations

In natural populations lions regulate the number of prey in most savannas systems. However, in small and fenced situations they are known to negatively affect prey populations, and this influence gets magnified on reserves where large scale hunting or continuous live removals for sale take place. Models have shown that increased numbers of predation in combination with regular harvesting can drive fenced prey populations to extinction. However, the same effect is also witnessed on reserves where hunting and live removals are not a regular occurrence, the difference is that it takes place over a longer period. Without careful monitoring and sometimes regulation of large predator numbers, ungulate populations can decline more rapidly than managers expect.

However, the effect of waterhole distribution on the predator-prey relationships on small fenced reserves has not been tested. The limited waterholes on Khamab might or might-not influence the potential impact of the lion population on the prey population, as well as on other predators like cheetah and wild dog. There is the potential that the predator-prey relationships on Khamab might be more balanced in comparison with other much smaller fenced reserves, taking into account both the size and limited water distribution on Khamab. Therefore, Khamab management should not over-react when the lion population increases rapidly initially, and appears to start having an impact on the prey population. Natural ecological balances takes time to develop, and likewise might take time for the growth rate of the lion population to respond to the impact on prey population numbers.

The impact of the lions on the prey should continuously be monitored and modeled in order to get a good understanding of the predator-prey dynamics. This should also indicate if some sort of equilibrium between the predators and prey are possible in the context of water distribution, or if the pattern on Khamab will follow what is seen elsewhere on other fenced reserves.

As a starting threshold of potential concern (TPC) for the prey population, if a 15% decrease in the prey population can be attributed to high numbers of lion

4.4.6 Meta-population management

The major reason for the introduction of lions in fenced reserves is by far majority done for tourism purposes, rather than ecological reasons. Most small lion populations get micromanaged and in isolation from other populations, which has the net effect of reducing the conservation values of these small lion populations on a regional scale. This prompted an initiative by several private and government management agencies as well as biologists dealing with lion management, to form the Lion Management Forum (LiMF), with the purpose of enhancing the conservation status of lion population on small fenced reserves. It also attempts to find solutions to lion management issues and challenges on fenced reserves.

Part of this strategy is to group small lion populations on fenced reserves together to form a larger lion meta-population. The idea is to have regular movement of lions between the different meta-population reserves by swopping of animals from time to time, and to work together to mimic a much larger natural lion population. All reserves will still have its own management objectives and measures, but by having regular contact and assisting each other by creating opportunities for movement of animals, will prevent micromanagement of the populations, and in that way increase the conservation value of each small population.

Khamab was one of the founding members of LiMF, and should continue to participate in this initiative. In this way it can achieve several of the objectives of the reserve as a whole, as well as the vision of keeping a lion population as described earlier.

4.4.7 Human conflicts and compensation

Conflict between humans and lions (and all other predators) should be avoided at all costs. This implies keeping the electrified boundary fence in perfect condition to minimize the risk of escaping to almost zero. However, even if the fence is in perfect condition, the chance of a large predator escaping are always present, and in the case of a large predator escaping, Khamab management should react immediately to either capture the animal and return it back to the reserve, or destroy it if no alternative is available, and/or the escaped animal poses danger to the life a human outside the fence.

In case the escaped animal causes damage outside the reserve if it escapes, Khamab should have a compensation policy to repay damages to the affected parties. Whether this compensation policy is covered by insurance, or from allocated budget funds are to the discretion of the management team. However, they need to ensure the public liability etc. is in place in case the escaped animal causes the death of a human being.

In order to ensure the continues respect that the large predators have for the electrified fencing, it should be ensured that all fences on Khamab to which predators have access to, be electrified and in good condition. This include fences around camps, houses etc. The reasoning behind this is that animals will increasingly test fence lines in attempts to escape if they regularly come into contact with fences without electricity or electrified fences that are not working properly.

The first line of preventing predator/human conflict situations is a proper working boundary fence line.

In the case of an animal escaping the reserve, but gets captured and returned to the reserve, such an animal should only be giving one chance. The next time it escapes again (except in exceptional circumstances which is not the fault of the escaping animal), the animal should be destroyed as soon as possible to avoid escaping turning learned behavior.

Khamab should develop a policy for the compensation of neighbors in the case of any large predator escaping the reserve and causing damage on neighboring properties, as well as for liability in the possibility of a human being killed by an animal that has escaped from the reserve.

4.5 Monitoring

The effectiveness of this management approach will depend on a detailed monitoring program. An adaptive management route should be followed to make this management approach work. For the success of any adaptive management approach information the outcomes of decisions are very important in order to feed back in future decision making processes. Therefore, to get a good understanding of the outcome of decisions in this regard, a stringent and detailed monitoring program is critical. This monitoring program needs to be permanent and ongoing. Lions as apex predators are important drivers in the ecosystem and can have top-down effects on ecosystem processes.

5. DETAILED ADAPTIVE LION MANAGEMENT APPROACH FOR KHAMAB KALAHARI RESERVE

As described earlier, the lion management plan on Khamab is based on two strategies.

Strategy 1 focusses on the restoration of ecological processes, while Strategy 2 involves the mimicking of natural control mechanisms that regulate lion populations.

The core of the lion management plan is based on the flow diagram (Appendix 3) which serves as decision making process on which management decisions can be based, and is very important in understanding the management process as described below.

5.1 Strategy 1 (Restoring ecological processes)

Strategy 1 should be the preferred (primary) management strategy to start off lion management on Khamab. As mentioned earlier, it is still untested, and therefore need to be monitored closely before decisions on its effectiveness can be made. Should it proof effective, it should remain the primary management strategy for managing lions on Khamab.

This strategy entails the following:

- Establish at least 2 prides on Khamab
- Establish at least 3 bachelor male coalitions
- Allow 2 or max 3 breeding cycles for pride males
- Remove pride males by live removal (preferable) or hunting (if no translocation options are available). Timing of removal will be important (try to remove when there are very young cubs or pregnant females pregnant). This should open opportunities for infanticide.
- Allow a young coalition to take over.
- Replace the coalition that took over with new, young coalition (either from outside of Khamab if new genes are needed or from within Khamab population).

Female dispersal groups should be allowed to establish prides to test for the increase in social pressure on the population. Khamab can potentially accommodate 3-5 prides based on home range size and available habitat.

Once fairly stable prides are established, lionesses that become loners should be removed, preferably by live removal.

Male coalitions should be restricted to maximum of one for each pride. Extra male coalitions should be removed by live removal (preferable) or hunting (if no translocation options are available) if they are old enough.

Pride sizes are not important and should self-regulate. However, if large prides leads to a significant increases in predation on large herbivores like rhino or buffalo, this strategy should be re-evaluated.

5.1.1 Monitoring

Monitor the outcome of Strategy 1, in particular population growth (inter-litter intervals, age of first breeding, cub survival).

Monitor the effects of these actions on the lion population growth and social structures.

Continuously monitor the effects of the lion population and the different management approaches on the prey populations.

Closely monitor impact on prey population, and use in predator-prey models to determine the effect of different management options on the predator-prey relationships.

If a decrease in prey populations can be attributed to lion predation (decrease of 20% of prey population), find the reason/s for this:

- Is the lion population to big?
- Are there too many prides?
- Are the prides to large?
- Too many single animals or bachelor groups?
- Is it related to environmental factors like water distribution?
- Is it a combination of the some of the above factors?

These can be answered with the use of models, using data from a monitoring program.

If the conclusion to above questions is that the lion population is too big, find the reason for why it is too big, and what can be done to remedy it.

- Is Strategy 1 not working, or not working well enough?
- Can Strategy 1 be adapted to make it work better?
- Should Strategy 2 be combined with Strategy 1 to make it more effective?

5.2 Strategy 2 (Mimicking natural control mechanisms)

Strategy 2 can be followed in case Strategy 1 does not prove successful. However, it should be kept in mind that the restoration of ecological processes will take time, and the natural drivers that are attempting to be restored with Strategy 1, need to be given ample time to start being effective.

However, should monitoring indicate that Strategy 1 does not lead to the desired results, Strategy 2 can be incorporated, and should ideally be combined with Strategy 1. Only in extreme cases should Strategy 2 be used on its own.

Strategy 2 involves mimicking natural control mechanisms that control lion populations

If a large lion population is responsible for decrease in prey numbers, the population needs to be reduced. Mimicking natural population control is important in this instance.

The best way to reduce impact on prey is to remove small dispersal groups, or a whole pride. In such a case the whole group or pride should be removed and no individuals left behind. This mimics normal dispersal or immigration and should not impact the surviving groups much.

The best option for removing a whole group is through live removals and relocation. However, options for relocation are becoming increasingly rare, and if it is a small group of only two animals they can be removed by hunting, alternatively if it is a larger group with young animals should be euthanized.

If this becomes a regular occurrence, other measures to reduce population growth should be implemented, but again should be focused on mimicking natural mechanisms.

- Unilateral tube tying to mimic decrease in litter sizes, but also mimic reduced cub survival into adulthood.
- Cub survival can be mimicked by euthanasia of cubs.
- Using once off contraception on young lionesses to increase age of first breeding.
- Using contraception on old lionesses to reduce age of last breeding
- Using single contraception in between litter to increase inter litter interval.

Of the above options, unilateral tube tying shows the most promise, and information should become available with regards to its effectiveness as more and more reserves are starting to use it as a management option.

KHAMAB KALAHARI RESERVE LION POPULATION

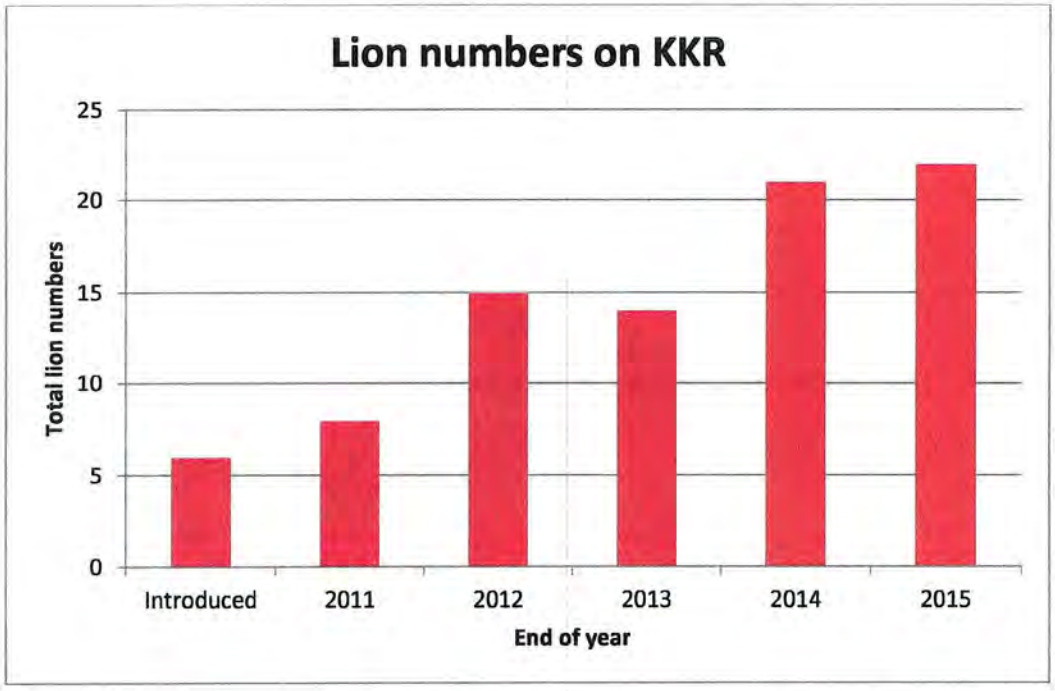
The first lions were introduced to Khamab Kalahari Reserve (KKR) in July 2011 with the introduction of two young adult males and two young adult females. Another two unrelated males were introduced in September 2011.

Several litters were born from the first group that was introduced.
In January 2014 the second introduced group of males ousted the first males as pride males and pushed them onto the western edge of the reserve, where they lived on their own for the following 18 months without integrating with the KKR lions again. These males were trophy hunted in August and September 2015.

In the meantime two new litters were born from the conquering males that pushed the original males out of the pride.

The current size of the population is 22 lions, with several young males from the first litters now at an age that they need to be removed from the reserve to prevent inbreeding with mothers and sisters.

This population size of 22 is the known number of lions on KKR and is not estimated. The lions are currently not in fixed prides, but occur in several smaller groups on KKR at present.



New genetic material in the form of new young males will be introduced soon, as guided by the KKR lion management plan, to replace the young males that needs be removed.

TROPHY HUNTING OF LION ON KHAMAB KALAHARI RESERVE

Lion management on Khamab Kalahari Reserve (KKR) is directed by a comprehensive Lion Management Plan. This document describes how trophy hunting of lion fits in with the Lion Management Plan for KKR, as it is not described in detail in the lion management plan itself.

Some of the key objectives of the lion management plan on KKR are to:

- manage the lion population in such a way that they form part of KKR's vision by seeing them as an ecological process that should function with as little management intervention as possible
- keep the lion numbers within the levels of acceptable change, allowing for natural fluctuations in population size, and ensuring that they do not reach levels where the prey populations are unable to recover from
- allow natural population regulation mechanisms to play a role in the maintenance of the lion population
- keep the genetic integrity of the population intact
- to ensure that lion population does not grow to levels where the continued existences of endangered predators like wild dog and cheetah are in jeopardy

The reason for introducing lions to KKR was first and foremost as integral part of the ecological system and processes. Lions, as apex predators, play a vital role in the health of ecological systems. For KKR, having lion on the reserve is about the conservation of the species, as well as the conservation and restoration of the ecological processes with which lions are involved.

The unfortunate reality of the majority of reserves in South Africa is that they are relatively small in relation to natural systems (despite KKR being 90 000ha or 222 000acres in size), and completely fenced. This implies that some sort of management is needed as natural processes cannot be left to play out completely on their own.

One unfortunate consequence of the conservation success of lions on free-roaming reserves in South Africa is that it was too successful and resulted in overpopulation on most reserves. Coupled with the fact that natural immigration cannot happen because of the presence of fences, implies that management needs to intervene to keep the lion populations at levels where the prey populations can sustain the predation by lion. Management also needs to intervene to keep the genetic integrity of the lion populations at healthy levels. This includes removing certain individuals from time to time, introducing new genetic material, or using other measures to keep populations at sustainable levels.

High lion population numbers are mostly controlled through culling or contraceptive techniques. As a result of the overpopulation of lions on most reserves, translocation options are extremely limited and virtually nonexistent for males over their prime. Various regulations also make it extremely difficult to translocate lions to other parts of Africa where lion populations are under pressure.

As KKR is privately owned, it has to be operationally self-funding in achieving its economic objectives. Unlike state reserves that are funded publicly, KKR is dependent on sourcing its own income from within the reserve itself. Hunting forms an integral part of the ecological as well as economical management plan of the reserve, and contributes 30% to the total income generated annually for the operational management thereof. This is achieved by means of a very conservative removals quota drawn up in conjunction with the reserve ecologist annually.

The balance of the income is generated by live game removals, breeding and sale of high value species, as well as small scale - low impact, photographic safaris.
The income generated by hunting and live game removals are dictated first and foremost by ecological factors and not with the sole function of earning an income. They are adapted annually according to the fluctuations in populations as well as local weather patterns.

The lion population on KKR are completely free-roaming, the majority of the lions being born on the reserve. They can roam over the entire area of the reserve (90 000ha), and are completely reliant on catching their own prey for food. Their movements are only restricted by the perimeter fence line, while inside the reserve itself there is no restriction or control over where they roam. Therefore, except for the outside perimeter fence, the lions on KKR live as any natural free-roaming population would have done, and there is no human interference at all in their day to day lives.
However, due to management considerations and population control as described above, it may be necessary to remove lions from the reserve from time to time. With the reserve being self-funding, it makes sense to earn income from hunting them instead of the other alternative which is culling, if no live translocation options are available.

Because of the unpredictability of the availability of males that can be hunted, there are no fixed quotas for lion hunts on KKR. Some years there might be one or more lions available for hunting, while other years there might be no lion available. Lions on KKR are not bred for hunting. Hunting is seen as just another tool in the lion management toolbox, as is translocation, culling, contraception etc. Compared to these options, which cost money to implement, hunting provides the additional benefit in that it generates income, which is directly ploughed back into the conservation and management programmes of the reserve.

KKR do not condone, support or associate with the intensive lion breeding and hunting industry in South Africa at all. KKR believes that hunting should only be used as tool that benefits the conservation of lions as a whole, and not just as a vehicle to generate money as seen in the captive lion industry. KKR management is of the opinion that trophy hunting used as part of a well thought out lion management plan can greatly benefit the conservation of free-roaming lion populations on fenced reserves, and also earn vital income that can be used directly to the benefit of conservation programs.

Customs Rules on Discharge of Importers Liability for Duties

The U.S. Customs Service has issued a final amendment of the regulations to provide an alternative procedure for an importer record to pay duties on imported merchandise through a licensed customhouse broker. Present rules provide for the payment of duties to Customs by a broker on behalf of the importer. Under the alternative procedure, the importer may elect to submit to the broker a separate check or bank draft for the duties payable to the "U.S. Customs Service". The broker would then deliver the importer's check or bank draft to Customs. The new rule also requires brokers to provide written notification to their clients, advising that if I the client is an importer of record, payment to the broker will not relieve the client of liability for Customs charges in the event that the charges are not paid by the broker. Brokers will be required to provide this notification to all active clients annually during the month of February. Additionally, brokers will be required to provide such information on a power of attorney executed on or after the effective date of the new rule. These amendments are effective as of September 27, 1982

Customs Rules on Discharge of Importers Liability for Duties

The U.S. Customs Service has issued a final amendment of the regulations to provide an alternative procedure for an Importer record to pay duties on imported merchandise through a licensed customhouse broker. Present rules provide for the payment of duties to Customs by a broker on behalf of the importer. Under the alternative procedure, the Importer may elect to submit to the broker a separate check or bank draft for the duties payable to the "U.S. Customs Service". The broker would then deliver the Importer's check or bank draft to Customs. The new rule also requires brokers to provide written notification to their clients, advising that if I the client is an Importer of record, payment to the broker will not relieve the client of liability for Customs charges in the event that the charges are not paid by the broker. Brokers will be required to provide this notification to all active clients annually during the month of February. Additionally, brokers will be required to provide such information on a power of attorney executed on or after the effective date of the new rule. These amendments are effective as of September 27, 1982

Note 1: If you hold an import permit for trophy/trophies that you did not use, please return the unused original permit to the address on page one.

Note 2: If you are requesting reissuance of a permit because you have taken a trophy, but were unable to import it prior to the expiration of the permit, please use the renewal form (3-200-52) and return your original permit with that form.

- Is being imported, exported, or re-exported by or on behalf of the hunter as part of the transfer from its country of origin ultimately to the hunter's country of usual residence; and

Customs Rules on Discharge of Importers Liability for Duties

The U.S. Customs Service has issued a final amendment of the regulations to provide an alternative procedure for an importer record to pay duties on imported merchandise through a licensed customhouse broker. Present rules provide for the payment of duties to Customs by a broker on behalf of the importer. Under the alternative procedure, the importer may elect to submit to the broker a separate check or bank draft for the duties payable to the "U.S. Customs Service". The broker would then deliver the importer's check or bank draft to Customs. The new rule also requires brokers to provide written notification to their clients, advising that if the client is an importer of record, payment to the broker will not relieve the client of liability for Customs charges in the event that the charges are not paid by the broker. Brokers will be required to provide this notification to all active clients annually during the month of February. Additionally, brokers will be required to provide such information on a power of attorney executed on or after the effective date of the new rule. These amendments are effective as of September 27, 1982.

1. Name of area operator:
Friederich Peter Johann Thormahlen,
Name Used-Peter

b. Name of company conducting hunt: Thormahlen & Cochran Safaris

2. Name of concession: Ondjou Conservancy Size in km^2: 8729

a. Land tenure: __ Government lease __ Community x_ Private ranch __ Private conservancy

b. Length of concession agreement: 2 years Can it be renewed? _x_ Yes __ No

c. Length of renewal, if applicable: 9 years

d. Estimated total amount received in trophy fees last year, if applicable: $33,590

e. Are there any special obligations under the concession agreement such as annual reporting, poaching control, community investment, community employment, etc.? If so, please explain:
ANSWER:
Yes, there are special obligations under the concession agreement:

- ANNUAL REPORTING -The Trophy Hunting Operator must submit an Annual Report Yearly within 30 days after the hunting season ends, which is 30 November. These Annual Reports are handed in at the Ministry of Environment & Tourism, as well as a copy at the Conservancy office, and the WWF office. Failure to submit the report timeously is punishable with a fine of N$5,000.

- COMMUNITY INVESTMENT – We donate school stationary supplies for the local school through the SCI Blue Bag system in the amount of N$54,000 per annum, buy uniforms for community game scouts and community camp staff to the value of N$84,500.
We donate the trophy hunting camp which was built at a cost of N$750,000 after a three-year period, back to the community and lease it from them so they can generate a monthly income from the trophy hunting camp. All maintenance is done by the Trophy Hunting Operator. The trophy hunting camp consist of 4 x client tents, dining area, kitchen tent, and 5 staff tents to the community.

  Drilling and maintaining of the boreholes in the concession to establish Permanent Wildlife Water Points is a crucial part of the concession development as water allows the elephants to become resident in the concession compared to the previous yearly migration into the concession when the natural pans fill up with water during the rainy season. After which the elephants move back into Khadoum National Park and Nyae Nyae Conservancy where there is Permanent Wildlife Water Points.

Installation of solar pump for water supply to the community members is also a crucial part of the community development program. Community members feel they are rewarded by the Conservation Developments when they receive fresh clean drinking water at their villages. This results in Wildlife Water Points being left alone and not damaged or settled around them, which chases the game away.

- COMMUNITY EMPLOYMENT - We permanently employ 5 Community Members as Camp Staff, and 12 community members as Casual labor in the concession. The Casual Workers are employed 10 months per year to open roads in the concession, open the concession boundaries (Cutlines), and to skin elephants when hunted. The Permanent Staff gets a basic salary of N$2,000 per month. The Casual workers get a monthly salary of N$1,750 per month. On average N$210,000 salary is paid per annum to Casual Workers who are community members, which is a great inflow of funds in the poor community.

- MEAT DISTRIBUTION – All hunted Trophy, as well as Non-Trophy game meat is distributed to villages in the concession within 24 hours after being hunted. As a company Policy we do not leave any remains of elephant where it was hunted - no bones, skin, meat etc. After 2 days diesel is poured onto the stomach gcontent and blood at the slaughtering site, wood stacked on top and burned. This is done to cause as little as possible stress on the elephants as there is no smell left of the hunted elephant or its remains. Elephant gets stressed seriously when bones and skin is left at the site!

- ANTI POACHING PROGRAM – Establishment of Wildlife Water Points is the first and most crucial development in the concession so that existing game becomes resident in the concession! After Permanent Wildlife Water Points (PWWP's) are established we start our Anti-Poaching program to protect the PWWP Equipment as well as the existing game. Currently all personnel are utilized as anti-poaching staff when no safaris take place. Community Game Scouts are on permanent anti-poaching patrols. Equipment and funding remain the biggest challenges as equipment is expensive.

f. Please provide the concession location and nearest city. Please attach a map or maps with the boundaries marked and showing the nearest city:

Nearest town is Gam.

Nearest City is Windhoek -650 km away.

10. Community investment:[3]

a. Does the company contribute money or goods/services to local communities? X__ Yes __ No

b. If so, what percentage or amount is shared, how often, and why (e.g., required by law, required by contract, voluntary contribution)? _

Communities gets 100% of money contributed by Hunters for non-exportable game (Own Use Quota). The Donation for a Non-Exportable elephant is US$15,000 of which US$3,500 goes to the community, and the rest is used to establish PWWP's in the concession as wildlife water points is our primary development goal. Without water the concession is just a "Green Desert" because all surface water seeps into the sandy soil. Two non-exportable elephant is on quota yearly. The Communal fee is a contractual fee.

Our clientele is primarily USA citizens who donate SCI Blue Bags with school stationary supplies. Each hunter hunting in the conservancy donates between one and two SCI Blue bags with school stationary at a value of US$200 each bag. Hence a minimum of 5-10 SCI Blue Bags is donated at a value of N$13,500 to N$27,000. The SCI Blue Bag donations is a Voluntary fee.

c. Does the company provide game meat to nearby communities? X_ Yes __ No

d. If so, please estimate the amount and/or value of meat contributed in prior year and describe the meat contribution program:

All the game animals hunted by us per the allocated quotas of the Minister of Environment and Tourism, go to the local community of Ondjou.

Elephant x 4 on quota x 4,500 kg meat x N$22 per kg = N$396,000 worth of meat is distributed to the Ondjou Communities.

A list of all villages that need to receive meat is handed to the hunting operator by the Management Committee, and meat must be distributed within 24 hours after an animal is hunted. If not distributed within 24 hours after the hunt the contractual penalty fee is N$22 per kilogram meat. With elephant that is a fine of N$99,000 per elephant or US$7,300.

e. If the company performs problem animal activities for surrounding communities (e.g., patrolling fields during the harvest, chasing away problem animals, conducting PAC hunts or PAC killings), please describe.

The Ondjou Concession block is not a horticulture area, and very little crops are raised. Mainly cattle, goats, donkey, and horses are raised by community members.

[3] The new FWS import permit application asks for activities that provide a "conservation benefit" to the species. The FWS considers community investment a "conservation benefit."

When an elephant damages any property, problem elephant situations are raised by the local community and it is addressed with the Chairman of the Community. The chairman then reached out to the Minister of Environmental and Tourism, who investigates the Wildlife Human conflict, and approves the problem animal permit in writing when enough evidence is collected by the Ministry. The Chairman then reached out to the Hunting Operator to provide a client. If a suitable client is found, there is a certain time limit to hunt the animal and the permit will be issued with the client's details.

The Operator must pay the community a predetermined contractual fee for the problem animal, and the meat has to be distributed to villages on the meat delivery list as per contract

f. Please describe any consolation payments made to residents damaged by game species. What currency are the expenditures reported in?

There is a Government Fund that is supposed to refund the community for damages, however it is depleted. Thormahlen & Cochran Safaris pays the community members compensation agreed upon by the community, the hunting operator and the Minister of Environment and Tourism, when damage was done to keep the community from killing the animals.

Species	Damage caused	Consolation paid 2018	Consolation paid 2019	Consolation paid 2020
Elephant	Very little damage caused	N$0
Lion	N/A – No Lion in Concession	N/A	N/A	N/A

TOTAL DAMAGED CAUSED	N$140,000	N$0

According to a report done by NACSO, there is human wildlife conflict, whereby hyena and wild dogs are the most troublesome and are responsible for the most incidents, followed by porcupine, leopard and caracal.

The cost of estimated human wildlife conflict cost on average, is N$140 000 per year.

The estimated poaching of high value species was none.

Natural resource benefits outweighed the conflict costs.

11. How many U.S. clients did the company have in the past three years, what percentage of the company's clients were from the U.S., and what fees did they pay?

We operate in South Africa and Namibia, and the figures below, is for the whole operation. In Ondjou we only hunt what is allocated on quota, and it is fixed by the Government. The Namibian Government, specifically the Minister of Environment and Tourism, set strict quotas at the beginning of every three years, revising it at the end of each year when the Hunting operator must submit a Hunting Report on that specific year. So, before the client arrives, the hunting operator must take out a hunting permit – and this is only available if it falls within the quota that was pre-approved.

Current Ondjou Trophy quota: 2 x trophy elephant, 2 x own use elephant, 4 x Steenbuck, 2 x caracal, 5 x jackal, 3 x kudu, 1 x leopard, 3 x ostrich, 4 x Oryx, 3 x warthog. 1 x duiker.

The table below is for the total of Thormahlen & Cochran's concessions:

12. Approximate dollar amount and/or percentage of the company's revenue from U.S. clients:

    95%

13. Other information: Please provide a narrative of other enhancement information about the operation, such as any special hunting policies (e.g., aging, size, resting areas), concession improvements (e.g., digging and maintaining boreholes, restocking), management activities, research, etc.

    Thormahlen & Cochran Safaris policy in our hunting blocks is:

    - to only hunt Leopard males of six years and older;
    - to only hunt Trophy elephant bulls of 47 years and older;
    - to only hunt elephant bulls in excess of 55 lbs tusks.

    This way we enhance the genetic trophy quality by hunting post-productive animals only.

Thormahlen & Cochran operates on other conservancies in Namibia, namely:
Na#Jaqna
Ondjou
Ozondundu
Otuzemba
Anabeb
Orupupa (2015-2017)
Otjambangu
Ombuijokanguidi
Okangundumba
Impalila
Kabulabula
We built trophy hunting camps in Na Jaqna, Ondjou, Anabeb, Impalila and Kabulabula.
Thormahlen & Cochran donate all the camps to the Conservancies.
We deliver all the meat that we hunt, to the conservancies, and Donate to every local school school stationary SCI blue bags.
We are building roads and are responsible for the water and electricity supply for the camps.
We employ the local community as staff and currently employ 5 to 6 conservancy members per camp as staff.
We are also responsible for the training of the staff to be able to serve the overseas clients.
To date we have 32 community members employed in the various camps.
We also have social responsibilities towards the conservancies: we built a school hostel, a community hall, drilling of waterholes, making Cutlines, building roads etc.
Ondjou's camp was built in 2018 for N$1,174,495.
We are buying protective clothing to the game guards and uniforms for the personnel on an annual basis.
Two of the most significant benefits for the conservancy, is the cash income derived from the trophy hunting activities to cover its own running cost, and to invest in their social programs, and the yearly employment of its own community members.

Customs Rules on Discharge of Importers Liability for Duties

The U.S. Customs Service has issued a final amendment of the regulations to provide an alternative procedure for an importer record to pay duties on imported merchandise through a licensed customhouse broker. Present rules provide for the payment of duties to Customs by a broker on behalf of the importer. Under the alternative procedure, the importer may elect to submit to the broker a separate check or bank draft for the duties payable to the "U.S. Customs Service". The broker would then deliver the importer's check or bank draft to Customs. The new rule also requires brokers to provide written notification to their clients, advising that if I the client is an importer of record, payment to the broker will not relieve the client of liability for Customs charges in the event that the charges are not paid by the broker. Brokers will be required to provide this notification to all active clients annually during the month of February. Additionally, brokers will be required to provide such information on a power of attorney executed on or after the effective date of the new rule. These amendments are effective as of September 27, 1982

Customs Rules on Discharge of Importers Liability for Duties

The U.S. Customs Service has issued a final amendment of the regulations to provide an alternative procedure for an importer record to pay duties on imported merchandise through a licensed customhouse broker. Present rules provide for the payment of duties to Customs by a broker on behalf of the importer. Under the alternative procedure, the importer may elect to submit to the broker a separate check or bank draft for the duties payable to the "U.S. Customs Service". The broker would then deliver the importer's check or bank draft to Customs. The new rule also requires brokers to provide written notification to their clients, advising that if I the client is an importer of record, payment to the broker will not relieve the client of liability for Customs charges in the event that the charges are not paid by the broker. Brokers will be required to provide this notification to all active clients annually during the month of February. Additionally, brokers will be required to provide such information on a power of attorney executed on or after the effective date of the new rule. These amendments are effective as of September 27, 1982

Customs Rules on Discharge of Importers Liability for Duties

The U.S. Customs Service has issued a final amendment of the regulations to provide an alternative procedure for an Importer record to pay duties on imported merchandise through a licensed customhouse broker. Present rules provide for the payment of duties to Customs by a broker on behalf of the importer. Under the alternative procedure, the Importer may elect to submit to the broker a separate check or bank draft for the duties payable to the "U.S. Customs Service". The broker would then deliver the Importer's check or bank draft to Customs. The new rule also requires brokers to provide written notification to their clients, advising that if I the client is an Importer of record, payment to the broker will not relieve the client of liability for Customs charges in the event that the charges are not paid by the broker. Brokers will be required to provide this notification to all active clients annually during the month of February. Additionally, brokers will be required to provide such information on a power of attorney executed on or after the effective date of the new rule. These amendments are effective as of September 27, 1982.

Note 1: This form should be used to request authorization to import trophies of species listed on Appendix I of CITES and/or as threatened or endangered under the ESA (examples include elephants, lions, cheetahs, wood bison, and markhor).

PLEASE USE FORM 3-200-19 FOR SOUTHERN AFRICAN LEOPARD TROPHIES AND SOUTHERN WHITE RHINOCEROS TROPHIES TAKEN IN NAMIBIA.

Note 2: If you hold an import permit for a trophy that you did not use, please return the unused original permit. Note 3: Applications for species listed as endangered under the U.S. Endangered Species Act are published in the Federal Register for a 30-day public comment period. Please allow at least 90 days for the application to be processed.

Note 4: Sport-hunted trophy is defined at 50 CFR 23.74 as follows: Sport-hunted trophy means a whole dead animal or a readily recognizable part or derivative of an animal specifically identified on the accompanying CITES document that meets the following criteria:

- Is raw, processed, or manufactured;
- Was legally obtained by the hunter through hunting for his or her personal use;
- Is being imported, exported, or re-exported by or on behalf of the hunter as part of the transfer from its country of origin ultimately to the hunter's country of usual residence; and
- Includes worked, manufactured, or handicraft items made from the sport-hunted animal only when:
  - i. Such items are contained in the same shipment as raw or tanned parts of the sport-hunted animal and are for the personal use of the hunter;
  - ii. The quantity of such items is no more than could reasonably be expected given the number of animals taken by the hunter as shown on the license or other documentation of the authorized hunt accompanying the shipment; and
  - iii. The accompanying CITES documents (export document and, if appropriate, import permit) contain a complete itemization and description of all items included in the shipment.

Note 5: Certain hunting trophies, including elephants, are subject to restrictions on their use after import into the United States. Please see 50 CFR 23.55 for more information or contact the Division of Management Authority.

Please submit such information on a separate page with your application.

IT IS OUR UNDERSTANDING THAT THE GOVERNMENT PROVIDED A COMPREHENSIVE POPULATION STUDY FOR 2018 AND HAS SUPPLIED IT TO DMA.

Customs Rules on Discharge of Importers Liability for Duties

The U.S. Customs Service has issued a final amendment of the regulations to provide an alternative procedure for an Importer record to pay duties on imported merchandise through a licensed customhouse broker. Present rules provide for the payment of duties to Customs by a broker on behalf of the importer. Under the alternative procedure, the importer may elect to submit to the broker a separate check or bank draft for the duties payable to the "U.S. Customs Service". The broker would then deliver the Importer's check or bank draft to Customs. The new rule also requires brokers to provide written notification to their clients, advising that if I the client is an Importer of record, payment to the broker will not relieve the client of liability for Customs charges in the event that the charges are not paid by the broker. Brokers will be required to provide this notification to all active clients annually during the month of February. Additionally, brokers will be required to provide such information on a power of attorney executed on or after the effective date of the new rule. These amendments are effective as of September 27, 1982

  - i. Such items are contained in the same shipment as raw or tanned parts of the sport-hunted animal and are for the personal use of the hunter;

CITES Section E
Paragraph 5

Wildlife conservators have observed an increase in the population of Kashmiri Markhor in Chitral, Pakistan. The markhor population in the conservancies, according to the latest counting survey (March 29, 2015) was 1,349 markhors in Toshi-Shasha and 434 in the Gahirait-Golen conservancy. The number of markhors in areas other than the two conservancies was 27 in Arsoon, 28 in Sheshi Koh Valley and 6 in Drosh Gol, bringing the total to 1,844. Adding a CGNP supported a population of 1,556, the total markhor population comes to 3,400 in the district.

As per community-based conservation programs put in place by the Department of Wildlife, the villages supporting the population of markhor were organized into Village Conservation Committees (VCCs). Each VCC was a statutory body which was incorporated in the Wildlife Act, whose office-holders were chosen by the villagers themselves. They had a defined role in the conservation process with financial powers vested in them. The diversion of 80 percent of the trophy fees for hunting of markhor to the VCCs acted as a catalyst which they utilized for their collective development on their own free will. Twenty percent of the funds go to the Wildlife Department.

8. All international shipment(s) must be through a designated port. A list of designated ports (where an inspector is posted) is available from http://www.fws.gov/le/designated-ports.html. Mr. Berg,

I am working on your Permit application to Import a sport hunted Markhor and need some clarification's. You gave your physical address as: 3838 Oak Lawn Ave., Suite 1720, Dallas, TX 75219. Is this your "Physical Address"? It had appeared to the Senior Biologist that it was a business address. The person shipping your trophy to you is unreadable. Is the first letter an "F" or an "E"?

Please get back to me with the answers to these questions and I can then issue your permit.

I am seeking a Reissuance/Renewal for my Cites Permit to import a Markhor from Pakistan. Due to multiple problems with the export of my trophy on the Pakistan side, including the cessation of shipments of Appendix 1 Trophies by Kuwait Airlines, we were unable to ship my trophy before the expiration of this permit. As of today, it is unclear how or when these trophies will be exported from Pakistan. I understand there are several Markhor trophies taken by other hunters which are also stranded, and several alternatives are being explored. In the meantime, I would appreciate an expedited reissuance/renewal of my permit in case this problem is solved in the very near future.

Thank you very much for your help in this matter. Please contact me on my cell phone at (b) (6) [redacted] if there are any questions or issues.

Re: Applications for Import of Sport-Hunted Lion Trophies

Dear Chief Van Norman:

Enclosed please find three applications to import sport-hunted lion trophies. The first applicant is hunting in South Africa, at Khamab Kalahari Game Reserve, an area that has been designated to have "wild" lion by South Africa's Department of Environmental Affairs. Please refer to the attached list and information in the DMA's files, which includes the management plan for this reserve. The applicant is lawfully hunting a lioness as a population control measure, as explained in the attached justification. Please consider that information and the information previously submitted by South Africa's DEA and Conservation Force in making a positive enhancement finding for this applicant.

The second applicant is hunting in Tanzania with Rungwa Safaris/Bundu Safaris. This operator has submitted an enhancement report, which was sent to the DMA in October 2016 and is attached for ease of reference. Please consider that information and the information previously submitted by Tanzania's Ministry of Natural Resources and Tourism/Wildlife Division/Tanzania Wildlife Management Authority and Conservation Force in making a positive enhancement finding for this applicant.

The third applicant is hunting in Zimbabwe in the Dande South concession. This concession incorporates extensive anti-poaching and community investment. We will shortly submit an enhancement report from this operator. Please consider that information and the information previously submitted by Zimbabwe's Parks and Wildlife Management Authority, Conservation Force, and others in making a positive enhancement finding for this applicant.

Please do not hesitate to contact us if you have questions.

Sincerely,

Regina Lennox

Hi John, here is the motivation to hunt 1 possibly 2 lionesses at Khamab this year. Let me know if this will cover what is required by USFW? John, have you heard from Matt Mouron?

Note below from Hanno, the reserve ecologist.

Hi Scruff and Johan

Attached the motivation for the hunting of the lioness. I think this should be sufficient as it describes in detail how it fits in with the National lion BMP as well as the KKR lion management plan.

Scruff, let me know if anything else is needed from our side for now?

I have spoken to the Northwest Conservation officials and the permit should not be any problem as we are one of the 4 approved reserves.

Best regards

MOTIVATION FOR THE HUNTING OF AN ADULT LIONESS ON KHAMAB KALAHARI RESERVE

Prepared by Hanno Kilian, Reserve Ecologist, Khamab Kalahari Reserve.

E-mail: ecologist@khamab.co.za

A Biodiversity Management Plan (BMP) for the African lion (Panthera leo) in South Africa was published for implementation in December 2015 in accordance with the National Environmental Management: Biodiversity Act (10/2004) (Gazette no. 39468). The wild managed lion metapopulation is one of three recognised lion populations in South Africa, the other two being the wild lion population and the captured lion population (BMP). The wild managed lion population typically occurs in fenced game reserves that are typically <1000km^2 in size. Fencing of reserves is seen mostly in South Africa, and few fenced reserves are seen in the rest of southern Africa. There are various pro's (Packer et al 2013) and con's (Creel et al 2013) of using fencing as hard boundaries of game reserves, but the reality is that fencing is unfortunately an essential component of lion conservation in the future as habitats get more fragmented (Riggio et al 2013) and human populations pushing towards boundaries of conservation areas. The managed lion population could therefore be an important example of conservation of lions in a changing African context.

However, because of the fragmented nature of the fenced reserve, the conservation value of these populations has been questioned (Slotow & Hunter 2009). Furthermore, management of these fragmented and isolated populations create problems as many of the natural processes that occur in large naturally functioning lion population were disrupted in the small fenced reserve. As it is almost impossible to restore these processes on these fenced reserves, another approach is needed. The approach that has been adopted to overcome these problems is to mimic the outcome of these natural processes through management interventions (Miller et al 2013) in a metapopulation approach (Selier & Ferreira 2017).

Disruption in social dynamics were identified as one of the key drivers of challenges in managed wild lion populations, of which rapid population growth and degraded predator-prey relationship are the most important (BMP). It is some of the basic biological characteristics of lions where the opportunity lies to mimic behaviour and dynamics of lion prides. These characteristics include ages of first breeding, litter intervals, cub survival, litter sizes, female dispersal and age of last breeding (Miller et al 2013). Several suggestions have been identified on how to mimic the outcomes for natural processes, which includes contraception, unilateral tube tying, translocations and removal of females, which are all recognised by the by the Lion Biodiversity Management Plan for South Africa (BMP).

To mimic the social and population dynamics of females and maintain an average pride size of four females, one or more of the following five management options are recommended:

1. Increase the age at first reproduction using contraception of sub-adult females;
2. Establish longer intervals between births using contraception of adult females;
3. Reduce age specific fecundity through reduced litter sizes using unilateral tube-tying of fallopian tubes;
4. Mimic female dispersal by removing as well as introducing sub-adult females at infrequent irregular intervals (on average once every 5 to 10 years);
5. Mimic higher death rates of old females by removing (through hunting/translocation) the oldest females (typically >10 years of age) in the pride.

The lion management plan of Khamab Kalahari Reserve (KKR) (Kilian 2016) has identified the same possibilities to mimic behaviour and population dynamics as those specified in the National BMP. However, in the lion management plan of KKR, the restoration of some of the biological process involved in lion dynamics are given priority above mimicking of the natural control mechanisms, which are far more invasive and management intense. Here mimicking especially refers to the use of contraceptives and other birth control options like unilateral tube tying or removal of ovaries. The restoration of biological process in lion populations would involve managing the population in such a way to promote natural pride structures, as well promoting male lion turnover, and facilitating the presence of roaming bachelor male coalitions on the reserve.

One of the problems identified with managed wild lions is the inclination of adult females to become loners (Miller et al 2013) and not associate in pride structures. This especially disrupts predator-prey dynamics, which results in an increase in overall predation, which can be a problem on fenced reserves. This has been flagged as a potential problem in the lion management plan of KKR, and which is something that was specifically highlighted as something that must be avoided (Kilian 2016). The female offspring of lone lionesses also tend to develop into lone females when they grow up (pers obs), which exacerbate the problem even further.

The KKR management plan suggests that females that spend more time on their own (or with their own offspring only) than with other lion groups, should be removed from the population to promote the development of stronger pride structures, as is the case in wild lion populations. These females can then either be removed through translocation if there are translocation options available, removed through hunting if they don't have dependant cubs, or euthanised as last resort.

Where translocation is not an option, trophy hunting can be a valuable meta-population management tool for South Africa's managed wild lions in the following instances (Selier & Ferreira 2017):

a. Removal of the oldest females (typically >10 years of age) in the pride to mimic higher death rates of old females.
b. Removal of sub-adult males (typically 2-4 years old) to mimic male dispersal.
c. Removal of the dominant male/s every 3 years to mimic pride take-overs.
d. Removal of oldest males (typically >8 years old) to mimic higher death rates of old males.

KKR has identified three lionesses that the fits the criteria of spending more time on their own than with other lions in a pride, and therefore do not form part of any pride. As per the KKR lion management plan (Kilian 2016), these lionesses should be removed from the population by one of the means identified above. Furthermore, it also coincides with the option above of mimicking higher death rates of older females as a management tool in the lion meta-population as identified by the BMP.

Options for the removal through translocation of older (10yr) adult females are extremely rare, and any possible translocation option will be pursued if they become available. KKR has decided to make at least one of these females available for hunting in 2018. This, however, will be dependent on her not having cubs at the time of the hunt, or not associated with a pride at that stage.

KKR is one of four reserves that were identified by the Scientific Authority and recognised by the Department of Environmental Affairs (DEA) as reserves where hunting of managed wild lions can take place. Hunting of lion forms an integral part of the management toolbox of the lion management plan on KKR, together with live removals and translocations, as well as the restoration of natural processes and conserving genetic diversity.

The removal of these old lionesses will benefit the lion population as a whole as it forms part of the process that KKR embarked on to restore natural lion social dynamics, and at the same time reducing the predation impact of the lion population on the game population of KKR. Hunting of one of these lionesses will therefor only have positive impact on the lion population, while also providing additional income to the reserve to assist in managing the reserve and its animal populations in a responsible and sustainable manner.

Dear Sir or Madame,

I am seeking to replace the attached CITES permit for the elephant I shot in 2012 because it is expired.

I had to replace this permit once already because the consignee's name did not match exactly on the CITES & the Tanzania export permit. By the time I got the attached replacement, all the other paperwork had expired.

Neither the first permit nor this one were used in any way. The elephant tusks etc are still in storage in Tanzania.

Thank you,
Catherine Hammond Rondeau

Hi Shaunta,

How are you? I am hoping you can help me out.

I received a CITES permit (No. 88593A) many months ago. In March, I sent an application to have it changed because a name was wrong on it. On April 1, I received a letter stating that you had received my application. On April 12, I received a request to turn in the original permit. This was surprising as nowhere on the website or in the instructions did it say I needed to turn in the original permit. I sent it in on April 13.

I called 800-358-2104 today to find out about the revised permit and was told that it has been abandoned. I checked with the nice man to see if my email, work address, and phone numbers are correct in your system, and they are. So, I was surprised to hear that my permit was abandoned with no further communication.

I left a message on Ailteas's voice mail, and I have not heard back from her.

Could you please help me get my revised permit? I really don't have the money to pay again, when I have already paid twice.

Thank you very much,

Cathy Hammond Rondeau

Please submit such information on a separate page with your application.

a. Do you have any information regarding the population status or trend data on the species hunted?

Outfitter has a very good track record of taking males. All relevant harvest data is recorded & submitted to the gov for inclusion in research reports, including the recent NDF doc on leopards in Mozambique.

b. In order to hunt, you likely paid for licenses or trophy fees. What were those fees and do you have any information on how those funds were used by either the landowner, community, or government?

The final fees are yet to be determined. A percentage of the fees the outfitter pays to the Mozambique government is returned to the local communities. A conservation honey beekeeping program has been started to further promote sustainable resource management practices by the local communities.

c. Do you have information on other funding activities that are being carried out, or were carried out, by the safari outfitter, professional hunter, concession holder, or land owner that provide a conservation benefit to the species being hunted/species hunted

Outfitter has several ongoing programs in the area specifically to benefit wildlife, including leopards. Water wells for wildlife use are regularly drilled and equipped with pumps. Outfitter employs over 40 game scouts, @ their own expense, to run a 24/7 anti-poaching program to help look after the wildlife.
