

Hagerman National Wildlife Refuge

Welcome to Hagerman National Wildlife Refuge

Hagerman NWR is one of more than 560 national wildlife refuges that form a network of United States lands and waters managed specifically for wildlife. Refuges provide habitat—food, water, cover, and space—for millions of migratory birds, over 380 threatened or endangered species, and thousands of species of native plants and animals.

Hagerman NWR was established in 1946 as an administrative overlay of Corps of Engineers lands on a portion of the Big Mineral Arm of Lake Texoma. The primary purpose of the refuge is to protect and manage 11,320 acres of habitat as refuge and breeding grounds for migratory birds and other wildlife. The refuge also provides compatible, wildlife-dependent recreational activities including wildlife observation and photography, fishing, hunting, environmental education, and interpretive programs for the public.

Habitats within Hagerman Refuge include 4,000 acres of wetlands, 7,000 acres of uplands, and 300 acres of croplands. These lands and waters are actively managed to support more than 338 species of birds, 34 species of mammals, 65 species of amphibians and reptiles, and 62 species of fish. Oil and gas production on refuge lands is permitted for mineral rights owners.
