RE: Southwestern Willow Flycatcher

Dear Supervisor Spangle,

The Southwestern Willow Flycatcher is on the brink of extinction! Critical habitat is absolutely necessary to ensure the survival and recovery of the Flycatcher and should include: CH 1

* All currently and recently occupied Flycatcher habitat, and all areas identified as important to recovery in the Recovery Plan. Species with critical habitat are significantly more likely to be improving than species without. This beneficial contribution is statistically independent of, and additive to, the separate beneficial effects of recovery plans and increasing time on the endangered species list. Species with critical habitat and recovery plans for more than ten years are more than three times as likely to be improving and 17% less likely to be declining than species with no critical habitat and recovery plan for less than ten years. The courts have ruled that "neither the Act nor the implementing regulations sanctions nondesignation of habitat when designation would be merely less beneficial to the species than another type of protection." Natural Resources Defense Council v. Department of Interior, 113 F.3d 1121, 1127 (9th Cir. 1997). I support this reasoning and believe critical habitat adds protection even in cases where there is some existing protection. HE 1 / CH 1

* Sufficient habitat to allow recovery of Flycatchers to a wider and more viable portion of their historic range, prioritizing areas within 50 miles of existing territories, which is close to the observed maximum dispersal distance of a flycatcher between breeding populations, followed by areas that would reconnect existing populations across the landscape. HE 1

* Designated critical habitat should encompass a minimum of the 100-year floodplain. HE 1

* Constituent elements of critical habitat should include riparian vegetation utilized by the Flycatcher, as well as the aquatic environment, which is a primary source of insect prey for the Flycatcher, and the stream banks that provide a necessary structural component supporting Flycatcher habitat. HE 1

Please do the right thing – help our feathered friends to survive and thrive.

Thank you. Sincerely,

Arisa Victor
