DeSoto National Wildlife Refuge Hosts a Large Concentration of Bald Eagles and Migratory Ducks and Geese

Missouri Valley, Iowa - Bald eagles, ducks and geese are flocking to the wetland and river habitats at DeSoto National Wildlife Refuge. The refuge is providing a resting and feeding spot for the migratory birds. The recent bird count conducted on Tuesday saw a total of 174 eagles, more than 58,000 ducks and more than 15,000 geese.

With this many eagles congregating on the refuge, there is a good chance for visitors to spot one. The eagles are being seen perched in trees along the Missouri River, from the visitor center windows (visitor center closed Monday, February 18 in observance of President's Day), on the ice near the south end of the lake and from the Bob Starr Wildlife Overlook.

While eagles can be seen all along the river valley, DeSoto Refuge provides a sanctuary for migratory birds and excellent viewing opportunities. Be sure to bring binoculars or spotting scopes for the best viewing as eagles may be a distance from the road. Other migrating bird species present on the refuge include common goldeneye, common merganser, mallard and Canada geese.

An entrance permit is required for all vehicles on days other than fee free days. The regular daily entrance fee for private vehicles is $3.00. Permits may be obtained at the pay stations near the entrances or at the Visitor Center. The charge for commercial vans and buses is $20, or $30 if 21 or more people are aboard. Annual permits, including the $15 DeSoto Refuge Pass, can be obtained at the visitor center.
