Welcome to Flint Hills National Wildlife Refuge

Flint Hills National Wildlife Refuge (NWR) covers 18,500 acres in the tallgrass prairie region of the broad, flat Neosho River Valley. The Refuge was established in 1966 as an “overlay project” on the John Redmond Reservoir Project, a U.S. Army Corps of Engineers flood control reservoir. Portions of the land and waters are managed by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

This Refuge is one of over 560 refuges in the National Wildlife Refuge System, a network of lands and waters set aside to conserve animals and their habitats for people today and for generations to come.

Hunting Regulations

All hunters must possess a Refuge permit. For all 2014 - 2015 Refuge hunts, this brochure, when signed and in your possession, serves as a permit for all Refuge hunts. This brochure is also available online at http://www.fws.gov/refuge/flint_hills.

State hunting regulations apply unless otherwise listed. Additional Refuge-specific regulations are outlined in this brochure and in Title 50 CFR. All commercial activities, including guided hunts, are prohibited.

Hours

Hunting hours are the same as those set in State regulations.

Access

Only licensed vehicles are allowed on designated Refuge roads as shown on the map. Parking must not impede traffic. Hunters can park in designated areas and along the shoulder of Refuge roads within one car width from the nearest edge of the road. No parking is allowed in front of gates. Accessing hunting areas from the Neosho River and hunting on the river is prohibited.

Closed Areas

All Refuge lands north of the Neosho River are closed to all public entry from November 1 to March 1 to provide sanctuary for migratory birds. Refer to the map for these areas.
