Conboy Lake National Wildlife Refuge

Conboy Lake National Wildlife Refuge is open from sunrise to sunset every day, except hunting, which has slightly different hours of operation.

For more information, contact the Mid-Columbia River National Wildlife Refuge Complex Headquarters in Burbank, WA at (509) 546-8300.

Visitor Activities

Willard Spring Hiking Trail

The Willard Spring Trail is a two-mile loop along the edge of the open marsh and into the pines. Beginning at the refuge headquarters, it parallels the west shore of the old Camas Lake lakebed, with views across the lakebed and north to the 12,000-foot Mt. Adams. The trail is suitable for all skill levels, but it is not officially ADA accessible. The return portion of the Willard Spring Trail uses an old dirt road for approximately 3/4 mile. The trail has some gentle grades.

Fishing

Bank fishing is permitted on a 1/4-mile section of Outlet Creek, upstream from the bridge on Lakeside Road in accordance with state and federal regulations. Common fish include brook trout and bullheads.

Cross-country Skiing and Snowshoeing

These activities are limited to the same areas open to the public that exist the rest of the year, and please, do everything you can not to scare wildlife.

Hunting

Hunting for waterfowl and select other bird species is allowed on certain areas of the refuge. For regulations and areas open to hunting, visit: www.fws.gov/mcriver/regulations/

Wildlife Observation and Photography

Wildlife viewing is best in the spring and fall when flocks of migrating birds are present. It is possible to watch both cranes and elk in the same field. Visit the refuge at first light or just before sunset; wildlife is more active at these times. To get a closer look, bring binoculars or a spotting scope. Move quietly and talk softly, if at all, so as not to disturb wildlife.
