Block Island
National Wildlife Refuge
Rhode Island National Wildlife Refuge Complex
Fact Sheet for Members of Congress

Highlights
- The refuge is world-renowned for its unusually high density and diversity of migratory songbirds in fall, with 95 species recorded at one time and more than 6,621 individual birds banded from 2004 to 2009.
- The Beane Point facility has had most of its water heated and 100 percent of its electrical power supplied by the sun since 1999.
- The refuge continues to host open house and nature programs at the renovated Beane Point facility.
- The refuge is home to the federally listed threatened American burying beetle.
- The refuge is pursuing a collaborative management program involving state, town and conservation organizations.

Issues
- High cost of land acquisition
- Refug is unstaffed due to budgetary constraints
- Isolated parcels make management difficult
- Reducing the spread of invasive species
- Management of barrier beaches in high public-use areas, including off-road vehicle use
- Managing incompatible public uses

Management Activities
- Implementing the approved comprehensive conservation plan (2002) to enhance wildlife habitats, control invasive species, eliminate non-compatible uses and increase visitor services
- Land protection plan targets 95 acres for land acquisition
- Lead in cooperative, interagency-financed, island-wide piping plover program
- Cooperatively planning public uses
- Restoring Beane Point facility for environmental education and employee housing
