

Ninigret National Wildlife Refuge (Kettle Pond and Salt Pond Units)

Archery Hunting Brochure

January 1 – January 31, 2017

By Special Permit Only

Welcome to the Ninigret National Wildlife Refuge. This refuge, along with the John H. Chafee, Block Island, Sachuest Point, and Trustum Pond National Wildlife Refuges, are part of the Rhode Island National Wildlife Refuge Complex. Specific Units of the Ninigret National Wildlife Refuge are open by special permit for the regulated hunting of white-tailed deer (Archery Only). Be familiar with the hunt maps and regulations to ensure you are hunting in an open area of the refuge. Hunters may hunt in either unit if selected for this lottery hunt.

Unit Descriptions

The Kettle Pond Unit is 114 acres of forested upland and is the home to glacial features such as kettle holes and moraines. These land features create a unique landscape that allows hunters to sit atop ridges peering down into large kettle holes. This hunting unit is populated with many large oak trees and low lying berry bushes providing good forage opportunities for wildlife.

The Salt Pond Unit is 348 acres of coastal shrubland. This unique National Wildlife Refuge was once an auxiliary airfield for the U.S. Navy during World War II. Since the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service began managing the property in the 1970's this once upon a time runway is now a thriving wildlife refuge that is primarily used by migratory birds as a stopover site.

Please respect and observe refuge regulations, boundaries and safety zones. A lack of responsibility on your part could result in a reduction or closure of refuge hunting opportunities in the future.
