

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: ALL PROTECTION MUST BE GIVEN TO OUR TOP TIER WILD LIFE, IN FLORIDA AS EVERYWHERE: Please do not downlist or delist panthers f...
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 4:57:52 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

SO NOT DOWNLIST OR DELIST THE PANTHERS!
THEY NEED PROTECTION. THE ESA IS MEANT PROTECT THEM!
ALWAYS!

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Gina Bilwin
60365 Cinder Butte Rd
Bend, OR 97702-8960
[REDACTED]
ginmonbil@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 1:35:08 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

Please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection during the five-year review for this species. With only a few hundred individuals, that action could mean the end of panthers forever. How would you explain that to your children?

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Amy Osajima
275 N Jordan Ave
Bloomington, IN 47405-1101
[REDACTED]
aosajima@indiana.edu

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Don't downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 1:17:21 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

Decisions like this must be based on sound science, and there isn't anything to support delisting panthers. Endangered Species Act protections have been essential in staving off extinction for this species and for whatever headway they've made in recovery. So please, during the five-year review for this species, please do everything possible to ensure panthers are not downlisted or delisted from Endangered Species Act protection, and encourage in any way you can further efforts to ensure they continue to survive and thrive in the wild.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Galicia Outes
317 3rd St
Apt 3c
Brooklyn, NY 11215-7405

vyrtigo@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Don't downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 1:43:43 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

My husband and I spend about 3 months in the Everglades at Chokoloskee Island every year and are always hearing on the local news about panthers being killed by road traffic. Cobras released into the Everglades and Cypress Swamp are also having an effect on panthers because the snakes are devouring much of the natural prey. These animals need a lot of territory to survive. As that territory gets encroached upon by development along Alligator Alley and in the Naples-Fort Meyers areas, it becomes even more critical that these iconic animals be protected by the Endangered Species Act.

Please do not downlist or delist the Florida panthers.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Elaine Warshell
112 Wyman Trl
Moultonborough, NH 03254-4938
[REDACTED]
ewarshell@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Endangered Species Act protect our 200 panthers
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 4:59:38 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Linda Francz
7422 SW 115th Pl
Ocala, FL 34476-9454

ljfrancz@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: It's premature to downlist or delist panthers
Date: Wednesday, August 23, 2017 3:46:29 PM

Aug 23, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

Less than 250 animals is NOT recovered. Not by any stretch of the imagination. The suggestion is unbelievably absurd.

Sincerely,

Dr. Shannin Zevian
1301 Friend Ave
Clearwater, FL 33756-3541
[REDACTED]
shannin.zevian@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Keep Panthers On the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 11:15:02 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

Please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Mary Hirose
1774 Westbury Dr
Hoffman Estates, IL 60192-1042
[REDACTED]
wearejedi@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Panthers and the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 1:26:11 PM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five (5)-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Linda Hassa
203 Village Way
Brick, NJ 08724-3745
[REDACTED]
lmhassa@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 2:56:38 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Morgan Edwards
4767 Travini Cir
Unit 101
Sarasota, FL 34235-7618

jusducky89@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 2:56:40 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Dear Mr Shindle,

So their fate rests, with you. You know everything about them, from a dwindling gene pool causing genetic mutations to motorists slamming into them on Alligator Alley. That hunters & ranchers, consider them vermin. Yet you ask for new information. Scientific information. Not a scientist, but it seems highly probable that if protections are lifted, the Florida Panther will simply fade into history, much like the Florida Black Wolf. Please, Mr Shindle, don't let them die out. xx

Humanely,

Theresa Siskind, RN

St Petersburg, FL

Sincerely,

Ms. theresa siskind
475 39th Ave N
St Petersburg, FL 33703-6101

(727) [REDACTED]
siskindtheresa1957@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 3:03:33 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Lori Tingzon
37281 Palmdale Rd
Rancho Mirage, CA 92270-2205
[REDACTED]
rtingzon@dc.rr.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 3:03:34 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Ashley Cunnyngnam
209 Lewisburg Ave
Franklin, TN 37064-2854
[REDACTED]
ohhelloashley@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 3:03:37 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Bonnie Masters
11409 Dundee Dr
Bowie, MD 20721-2421

jem11409@comcast.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 3:26:26 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

If special protections for Florida panthers are not continued, decades of conservation work and associated progress will be lost. During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Tina Schrader
4734 W Iowa Ave
Tampa, FL 33616-1071

schrader.tina@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 3:26:28 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Pat Kincheloe
2610 Pine Grove Dr
Richmond, VA 23294-6221
[REDACTED]
patkincheloe7@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 3:26:40 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Theresa Murcas
110 Bywood Rd
Elkton, MD 21921-6104
[REDACTED]
terryvirgo@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 3:27:09 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Evelyn Aron
1975 Chanticleer Ave Apt A
Santa Cruz, CA 95062-1869
[REDACTED] earon48@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 3:27:10 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Taryn Vogt
615 Tam O Shanter Dr
Orlando, FL 32803-6928
[REDACTED]
slayermcpants@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 3:27:14 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Jess Smith
135 Cherrylaurel Dr
Youngsville, NC 27596-7143
[REDACTED]
designbyjls@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 3:27:49 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

Hubert Reeves has said, "Man is the most insane species. He worships an invisible God and destroys a visible nature, unaware that this nature he's destroying is the God he's worshipping." PLEASE let us not destroy this magnificent creature. During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Claudine Battisti
202 S Raymond Ave
Unit 214
Pasadena, CA 91105-4115

claudb4177@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 3:29:26 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Katie Magallon
4652 Custer Ave
Brookfield, IL 60513-2538
[REDACTED]
katie.magallon@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 3:29:48 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection. We are judged by the way we treat the vulnerable.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Kathryn Moore
1560 Waterford Pl
Manhattan, KS 66502-0435
[REDACTED]
howdydoody4537@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 3:29:57 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Maquel Sarantakos
1701 Woods Rx
Nicholasville, KY 40356
[REDACTED]
maquel88@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 3:30:02 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Timothy Gruppi
7 Belmont St
South Grafton, MA 01560-1303
[REDACTED]
timgruppi@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 3:30:06 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. peter wielebinski
16 Manchester Ct
Jackson, NJ 08527-3972

palmeiras22@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 3:31:33 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Todd Hollis
1221 Auburn Ave NW
Apt Suit
Massillon, OH 44647-6233
[REDACTED]
76hollis@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 3:34:07 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Brittany Chinigo
252 Old Canterbury Tpke
Norwich, CT 06360-1362
[REDACTED]
brittany.chinigo@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 3:34:15 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

"The progress of a nation can be measured by the way it treats it's animals." Gandhi

PLEASE allow panthers to remain under Endangered Species Act protection.

Kindest Regards,

Valda Benson
4540 N 17th Dr
Phoenix, AZ 85015

Sincerely,

Ms. Valda Benson
4540 N 17th Dr
Phoenix, AZ 85015-3817
[REDACTED]
valbenson@ymail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 3:34:30 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Lucy Couture
5014 Cambridge St
Sugar Land, TX 77479-3969

lucyec.27@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 3:34:33 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Joan Jazwinski
9929 E Placita De Las Palmeritas
Tucson, AZ 85747-9120

jjazwinski1222@msn.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 3:58:35 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

At this time, while there is a review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Jennifer Holliday
4105 Stonewood Ln
Williamsburg, VA 23188-8016
[REDACTED]
hollidayj94@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 3:58:59 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Lissett Moraguez
11808 Easthampton Dr
Tampa, FL 33626-2647

liz.moraguez@verizon.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 3:59:18 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Stacy Grossman
2745 Allegheny Ave
Bexley, OH 43209-1013

stacygandadamg@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 4:00:40 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Marie Helming
Vallerstad bjuggorp
Skänninge, None 59692
[REDACTED]
mberghelming@yahoo.se

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 4:01:20 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. M. Kimberly Dalinowski
36244 English Dr
Sterling Heights, MI 48310-4323
[REDACTED]
crowmerriweather@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 4:01:44 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Joanna Kerry
4028 Cornwall B
Boca Raton, FL 33434-2948

joeyk712@ymail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 4:01:55 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Rhonda Bullock
4842 SE 33rd Ter
Ocala, FL 34480-8472
[REDACTED]
rhondalb01@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 4:03:03 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Patricia Connelly
563 Laurel Ave
Carneys Point, NJ 08069
[REDACTED]
pconnelly01@comcast.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 4:03:21 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Joan Heezen
760 107th St
Roberts, WI 54023-8327
[REDACTED]
heezenj@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 4:04:00 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Donna Dale
7009 Weil Ave
Apt G3
Saint Louis, MO 63119-5656
[REDACTED]
donnadale@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 4:04:12 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Niloofar Khodadadeh
8149 Fairchild Ave
Winnetka, CA 91306-2012

niloovox@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 4:04:40 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Carole Staples
381 E 99th Pl
Thornton, CO 80229-2150
[REDACTED]
carolestaples7@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 4:05:23 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Dr. Homere -
9B RUE BOISSON
DIJON, WA 99352

homeregoz@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 4:05:45 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Annmarie Kesling
18926 E Briargate Ln
Parker, CO 80134-3675

icetiger143@msn.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 4:06:09 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

I have had the opportunity out to spend time on Sanibel Island for decades, so although I live in Pennsylvania I am interested in the health and environment of Florida. Please protect this vulnerable species.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Catherine Raymond
215 Linwood Ave
Ardmore, PA 19003
[REDACTED]
catray7@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 4:26:05 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Sheree Courtney
2520 Ryan Rd Apt 27
Concord, CA 94518-2635
[REDACTED]
scmoose18@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 4:26:17 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Teri Duchac
11 Indigo Pl
Aliso Viejo, CA 92656-2834
[REDACTED]
mspoooh563@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 4:27:00 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Randall Foreman
1051 Homestead Ave
Metairie, LA 70005-1617
[REDACTED]
rkforemanapllc@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 4:27:38 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Dr. Anthony Lease
2121 Mountain Hollow Dr
Signal Mountain, TN 37377-1261
[REDACTED]
tony-lease@utc.edu

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 4:27:46 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Erin Chae
19 Union Ave
3
Boston, MA 02130-2615
[REDACTED]
erin.sauvegarde@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 4:27:59 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Elizabeth Boyle
5560 Regent Village Dr
Winston Salem, NC 27103-6064

betsy1969@outlook.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 4:28:11 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Kelley Mayer
10305 Licorice Way
Orlando, FL 32821-8816

quatresprincess@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 4:28:24 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Ellie Vaughter
1631 Zenobia St
Denver, CO 80204-1043
[REDACTED]
onemissellie@centurylink.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 4:28:39 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Theresa Owens
615 Ellen Rd
Newport News, VA 23605-2813
757887723 throwsens@msn.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 4:29:10 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. sophie deruiter
PO Box 332
Yelm, WA 98597-0332
[REDACTED]
sophiede@comcast.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 4:30:13 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Ellen Leary
140 Colonel Bell Dr
Brockton, MA 02301-1956
[REDACTED]
calielove91@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 4:30:18 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Melissa Kainberger
PO Box 1514
Battleford, SK S0M 0E0
[REDACTED]
aj_kix@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 4:34:34 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Mary Young
102 West Rd
Tacoma, WA 98406-7624
[REDACTED]
vcyung@gmsil.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 4:34:53 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Please help the panthers in Florida. Give them a protected area. When I lived in Florida years ago, there weren't many of them. Now that their numbers have increased, we would like to keep them safe.

Thank you for your kind attention to this matter.

Sincerely,

Ms. Carol Whittemore
4016 Mary Cir Apt D
Las Cruces, NM 88001-7636
[REDACTED]
desertrose1917@peoplepc.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 4:34:54 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Dr. Annelii Öhman
Nibble 51
Järna, None 15391

anneliiohman@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 4:35:01 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Olga Olga
Russo
Jersy, AL 56781
[REDACTED]
ol19kr20o19@mail.ru

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 4:35:05 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Gail Wilke
10941 Walnut Dr
Sunland, CA 91040-1356
[REDACTED]
gail.wilke@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 4:37:55 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Patricia Tarantino
401 E 82nd St
New York, NY 10028-6613

patricia.tarantino863@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 4:56:25 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Michaela Rohr
Ziegelhüttenweg 56
Frankfurt am Main, IL 60598
00496943098296 micharoh@web.de

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 4:56:26 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Diane Richards
45 Jeffrey Ln
Canton, NC 28716-9365

santas12@charter.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 4:56:31 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Karron Esmonde
3663 Sutter Ct
Oceanside, CA 92056-5480
[REDACTED]
karrone_sutter@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 4:56:51 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Mario Echevarria
2715 Grinnell Dr
Longmont, CO 80503-3601
[REDACTED]
mookieonmars@msn.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 4:57:15 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Frieda Carlson
110 S Milwaukee St
Fredonia, WI 53021-9346
[REDACTED]
whatnot490@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 4:57:23 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Mark Bastian
1565 1st Ave
New York, NY 10028-4003
[REDACTED]
bastianmark@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 4:58:06 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Mel Perreault
506 Hollis Ave
Ypsilanti, MI 48198-3919
[REDACTED]
greencheesedogs@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 4:58:24 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Leslie Schneiderman
3882 40th Ave W
Bradenton, FL 34205-2356
###-###-####
hsalh533@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 4:58:33 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Deborah Quast
355 SW 131st Ave
Beaverton, OR 97005-0647
[REDACTED]
dtquast@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 4:59:29 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Thomas Cierech
58 Alta Vista Dr
Ringwood, NJ 07456-2002
[REDACTED]
tfcierech@optonline.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 4:59:35 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

We must still have safe places for our larger wild animals to live.
Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Aiko Dorr-Dorynek
315 New St
Apt 319
Philadelphia, PA 19106-1135
[REDACTED]
aikodesign@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 4:59:42 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,
Ellyn Nemeth
2894 Glenrose Street
Portage, IN 46368

Sincerely,

Mrs. Ellyn Nemeth
2894 Glenrose St
Portage, IN 46368-3400
[REDACTED]
greyhound3@frontier.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 5:04:27 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Stanley Bieber
100 Clarewood Dr Apt 2k
Hastings ON Hudson, NY 10706-3635
[REDACTED]
sbieber207@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 5:04:39 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Rhonda Carpenter
2233 S County Rd 23 E
Berthoud, CO 80513-7908

rhondac2@msn.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 5:05:07 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. rish harde
1444 east brooks
memphis, TN 38115
[REDACTED]
trinira85@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 5:25:46 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Sherri Williams
1135 Daytona Ave
Holly Hill, FL 32117-2705
[REDACTED]
speciesamused@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 5:26:13 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. dana Gurley
3508 Black Gold Dr
Mckinney, TX 75070-7996
[REDACTED]
danagurl333@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 5:26:21 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Lucie Maraialkovia
Prima 314
Decin, Ceska republika, DC 40711
+420604460965 luckam68@seznam.cz

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 5:26:27 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Jesse Lawless
534 Whitt Ave
Burlington, NC 27215-8015

jlawless@bop.gov

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 5:26:49 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Nancy Wehnert
818 SE Damask Ave
Port St Lucie, FL 34983-4011
[REDACTED]
njwehnert@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 5:27:18 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Jackie Luft
21 Lounsbury Rd
Ridgefield, CT 06877-4710

jackieluft@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 5:28:02 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Kate Judd
8150 W 30 1/2 St Apt 208
Saint Louis Park, MN 55426-3627
[REDACTED]
kbjudd30@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 5:28:13 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Arlita Brisbin
601 College St
Loudon, TN 37774-1116

brisbin64@msn.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 5:28:50 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Cyndia Studt
600 N Western Ave
Beloit, KS 67420-1852

cyndia.studt1@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 5:29:06 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Lisa Hewitt
122 Reed St
Hightstown, NJ 08520-3609
[REDACTED]
fluffinatoremmitt@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 5:29:13 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Kaitlyn Bellino
4302 Oak Hollow Dr
High Point, NC 27265-9652

kbellino@outlook.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 5:29:39 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Marilyn Brauer
18168 Pribble Rd
Lawrenceburg, IN 47025-9662

jmbrauer@embarqmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 5:34:07 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Cherie Carrasco
3700 Buchanan St Spc 203
Riverside, CA 92503-4872

cherieays@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 5:34:26 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. claudia allakpezoun
4326 N Miami Ave
Miami, FL 33127-2624
[REDACTED]
afeihomer@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 5:56:23 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Patricia Garley
4257 Kane Crescent
Burlington, ON L7M 5C2
[REDACTED]
pat@alexandermetals.ca

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 5:56:27 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Karma Whitehust
318 W Palm St
Lantana, FL 33462-2814
[REDACTED]
karma013@icloud.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 5:56:44 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Sharon Clevesy
3307 Sunset Ter
Auburn, CA 95602-9241
[REDACTED]
calicocats@sbcglobal.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 5:57:21 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Susan Soltero
RR 36 Box 6157
San Juan, PR 00926-9508

susansoltero@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 5:57:40 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Kim Stanis
100 Dudley St
Jersey City, NJ 07302-4468

kimstanis@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 5:57:42 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Ann Kesling
1185 Garrett St
Mtn Home, ID 83647-4371
[REDACTED]
icetiger143@live.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 5:57:43 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Cheri Haram
8013 6th St NE
Fridley, MN 55432-1817

cheriharam@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 5:57:49 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Save these beautiful animals!

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Sharon Morgan
4731 Ironwood Ln
Silver City, NM 88061-8624
[REDACTED]
paganlady718@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 5:58:17 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Jacquelyn Lobelle
9009 NE 54th St
Vancouver, WA 98662-6286
[REDACTED]
onpu1@lycos.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 5:58:18 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Dr. Cynthia Bradham
24 Cummington Mall
Boston, MA 02215-2425

cbradham@bu.edu

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 5:58:54 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Rubi Ramos
5122 Sunrise Blvd
Delray Beach, FL 33484-1118
[REDACTED]
elqdameyo@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 6:03:53 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Helene Clifton
37717 shady park
selbyville, DE 19975
[REDACTED]
cjaxlax36@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 6:04:19 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Lisa Toler
519 White Oak Ln
Crestview, FL 32539-8396
[REDACTED]
sable2002@cox.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 6:04:28 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Dr. Sara Monteleone
3965 Highland Dr
Carlsbad, CA 92008-3512

saramon810@att.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 6:26:10 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Linda Howell
272 Harry Shirley Rd
Kearneysville, WV 25430-3750

lj_howell@msn.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 6:26:41 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Joanne Cimorelli
20508 Wilderness Ct
Estero, FL 33928-9164

joannedcimorelli@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 6:26:42 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Linda Brodeur
2942 Cornwall Rd
Bethlehem, PA 18017-3312

lbrodeur@ptd.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 6:26:58 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Barbara Dover
34 Quail Hollow Dr
Westampton, NJ 08060-3716
[REDACTED]
kiwidover@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 6:27:19 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Eileen DeCora
PO Box 850
Williston, FL 32696-0850
[REDACTED]
eileen@celticcattlefarm.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 6:27:47 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Virginia Sui
1419 Dominis St
Apt 1103
Honolulu, HI 96822-3227
[REDACTED]
virginiasui@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 6:27:49 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Tracey Mazzone
5268 S Carolina Ave
Egg Harbor City, NJ 08215-4024
[REDACTED]
michaelntracey@comcast.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 6:27:57 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Darlene Robinson
1120 3rd St
Orange City, FL 32763-4110
[REDACTED]
darlenefire@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 6:33:14 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Holly Phillips
11800 Tingley Ln
Klamath Falls, OR 97603-9573
[REDACTED]
hphillips017@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 6:33:27 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Sheila Stevens
120 N Bethlehem Pike
Apt B109
Ft Washington, PA 19034-1234
[REDACTED]
sbstevens18@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 6:33:32 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss jennifer bohn
1631 pinetree cres
missisauga, NV 89001
[REDACTED]
jenbohn@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 6:33:53 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Debra Wirth
8577 Hauser Ct
Lenexa, KS 66215-4549

dlwmjc@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 6:33:55 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Teresa Dziadul
155 Setter Pl
Freehold, NJ 07728-9529
[REDACTED]
tdziadul@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 6:40:07 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Denise Ringpfeil Sheehan
3741 De Garmo Lahe
Miami, FL 33133

denise@sdrptproperties.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 6:56:29 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

It is critical that we continue to protect these magnificent animals. They already face difficulty by losing their habitat due to human intrusion, i.e., housing development, road development and vehicle collisions. More are being killed than being born. So, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection. They need our protection more than ever.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Julie Davis
79 E Daily Dr
Ste 201
Camarillo, CA 93010-5807
[REDACTED]
jdlovescats@verizon.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 6:56:35 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Boel Stridbeck
Åberg Fäladsväg 3
Genarp, None 24772
706613590
boel.stridbeck@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 6:56:46 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Melissa Gandra
PO Box 93471
City of Industry, CA 91715-3471

ya-melissa.m@yandex.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 6:56:50 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Barbara Brooks
8968 Red Leaf Way
Sacramento, CA 95826-4050

jbnbrooks@comcast.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 6:56:50 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Mel Tham
1701 W Charleston Blvd
Las Vegas, NV 89102-2325

melissartham@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 6:56:57 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Ramona Evans
3305 E Ransom St Apt D
Long Beach, CA 90804-2606
[REDACTED]
monaevans087@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 6:56:58 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Lora Smith
11172 County Route 9
Clayton, NY 13624-3203
[REDACTED]
lc689535@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 6:57:07 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss LaDonna Horejsi
PO Box 452
141 State Hwy 371
Hackensack, MN 56452-0452
[REDACTED]
llh1969@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 6:57:09 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Lyn Huston
2439 Deepridge Cir
Akron, OH 44313-4607
[REDACTED]
lach719@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 6:59:54 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Carol Graff
6600 SW 45th St
Miami, FL 33155-5927

cookiegoepel@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 6:59:55 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Sandra Thompson
38 Ridge Ave
Mount Holly, NJ 08060-1639
[REDACTED]
samandgeorge07@comcast.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 6:59:58 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Jessica Arcury
12617 Tucker Crossing Ln
Charlotte, NC 28273-4746

yarcury@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 7:00:06 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

I know there are people who still care about the earth's beautiful wildlife. I hope you're one of them. We are their voice. Please speak up for them!

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Cheryl Mickel
PO Box 850
Middleburgh, NY 12122-0850

cheryl.mickel@middleburghcsd.org

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 7:03:37 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Dita kali
Levstikova 4
Moravske Toplice, None 09226
[REDACTED]
dita.skalic@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 7:26:29 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Beth O'Brien
510 M St SE
Apt A12
Auburn, WA 98002-6280

beobrien25@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 7:26:48 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Rande Neylon
770 Airport Rd
Two Harbors, MN 55616-5029
[REDACTED]
randeneylon@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 7:26:49 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Marisa Hillinger
500 Newport Center Dr
Ste 800
Newport Beach, CA 92660-7008
[REDACTED]
marisahillinger@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 7:26:50 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Alexandra Al-Ghazi
1817 S 244th Pl
Des Moines, WA 98198-8641

alexandrasue@icloud.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 7:27:35 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Cathy Houde
1205 Vizcaya Lakes Rd
Ocoee, FL 34761-6967

catsandcrocs@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 7:27:51 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Tanya Phillips
3348 Corte Del Cruce
Carlsbad, CA 92009-9548
[REDACTED]
tmb760@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 7:33:28 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Nancy Gallegos
1013 Collie Path
Round Rock, TX 78664-3443
[REDACTED]
nancygallegos70@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 7:33:41 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Debra Mills
173 W 29th St
Northampton, PA 18067-1011
[REDACTED]
ddmcocacola@rcn.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 7:34:03 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Mallory McNicoll
1567 Botsford Street
Ottawa, ON K1G 0P8

mallory.mcn@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 7:34:03 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Steeve Malamas
728 Thomas St
Plainwell, MI 49080-1341
[REDACTED]
pinkbutterflysj@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 7:35:12 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Gloria Benoit
1685 Seabreeze Dr
Tarpon Springs, FL 34689-2027
[REDACTED]
purple68vette@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 7:40:03 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Joanna Stiehl
216 9th Ave SE
Olympia, WA 98501-1350
[REDACTED]
purplerats@outlook.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 7:41:02 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Dianna Burton
128 Sipple Ave
Baltimore, MD 21236-4329

tairuandradi@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 7:56:13 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Mary Guziwski
119 Sumner Ave # 1
Pittsburgh, PA 15221-4325

guzowski6@verizon.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 7:56:17 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Shauna Brown
18 S Summer Cloud Dr
Spring, TX 77381-6226

shaunacbroen@comcast.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 7:56:40 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Maria Gillem
1733 U St NW
Washington, DC 20009-1703
[REDACTED]
ziblick@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 7:56:46 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Barry McGivney
53 Rockwell Cir
Marlboro, NJ 07746-1158
[REDACTED]
goldenstop@optonline.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 7:57:01 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss D Grubbs
1917 Rusdell Dr
Irving, TX 75060-6550

grubbsdiann@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 7:57:02 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Ruth Folger
111 Montgomery Cir
Stephens City, VA 22655-5905
[REDACTED]
ruth.folger@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 7:57:13 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Brandy Werner
25 Firenze St
Laguna Niguel, CA 92677-8830
[REDACTED]
sickperra@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 7:57:41 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Patricia Lewis
3430 S Sepulveda Blvd
Los Angeles, CA 90034-6053
[REDACTED]
autumn3430@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 7:57:52 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Melissa Plamondon
2215 Overland Ave
Los Angeles, CA 90064-2025
[REDACTED]
melissa.plamondon@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 7:58:01 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss t zenko
4849 N Troy St
Chicago, IL 60625-4209
[REDACTED]
zenkali2@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 8:02:23 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Sandra Schiano
216 Rockland Rd
Pearl River, NY 10965-2684
[REDACTED]
blab@optonline.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 8:04:06 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Brenda Treadway
30 N Charlotte St
Lancaster, PA 17603-3726

treaddy69@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 8:09:46 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Melanie Goodyear
1215 Arthur Ln
Metamora, IL 61548-9735
[REDACTED]
mels1231@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 8:25:59 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,
Sonia Camara
Rua Gustavo Sampaio 598 apt801
Rio de Janeiro, None 22010 Brazil

Sincerely,

Mrs. Sonia Camara
Rua Gustavo Sampaio 598 apt801
Rio de Janeiro, None 22010-010
5521991402185 socamara1972@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 8:26:24 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Ma. Elena Guillermo
32 núm 256 Montes de Ame
Merida, OR 97115
My number is private.
megapeon1@prodigy.net.mx

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 8:27:29 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Rebecca Schneider
7112 Lake Magnolia Dr
New Port Richey, FL 34653-6906
[REDACTED]
schneidsgirl@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 8:27:34 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Paul Straker
1890 Addison Ave
West Mifflin, PA 15122-3800
[REDACTED]
pjs418us@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 8:27:40 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Michelle Howell
4110 Imperial Eagle Dr
Valrico, FL 33594-3965
[REDACTED]
agapel1025@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 8:33:56 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Nora Sachs
2020 Washington Ave
Unit 214
Saint Louis, MO 63103-1651

noraesachs@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 8:33:58 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Elaine Connors
29378 Herbert St
Madison Heights, MI 48071-2511

elaineconnors@wowway.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 8:33:59 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Stephanie Fackrell
117 NW Redbud Cir Apt 12
Topeka, KS 66617-1881
[REDACTED]
granite007@sbcglobal.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 8:34:18 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Cynthia Falls
14162 Fennsbury Dr
Tampa, FL 33624-2597
[REDACTED]
cwfalls39@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 8:34:36 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Audra Smith
1 Squantum Rd
Paxton, MA 01612-1403
[REDACTED]
arsmith2048@charter.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 8:55:55 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Wanda Rowe
PO Box 146
Beaufort, SC 29901-0146

starsouthreporting@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 8:56:05 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Judith Case
80 Hinman St
Cheshire, CT 06410-2530

heyjude_3@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 8:56:17 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss kelrose myers
PO Box 2065
Silver Springs, FL 34489-2065
[REDACTED]
kpmpegasus@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 8:56:23 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Jennifer Loving
4613 Calle Nogal St
Temple, TX 76502-3468

jloving04@live.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 8:56:43 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Sebrina Nielsen
1836 Paddock Pl
Fitchburg, WI 53575-2048
[REDACTED]
sebrinan@charter.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 8:57:10 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Jane Hoffman
55 W 14th St
Apt 8d
New York, NY 10011-7411
[REDACTED]
jehoffman@earthlink.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 8:57:25 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Joyce Eviston
1012 Mary Ingles Hwy
Melbourne, KY 41059-9763

evistonjoyce@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 8:57:36 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Valentina Gonzalez
Condor 1107 Santiago, None 058
79713149 valentina.pgb@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 8:57:43 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Jessie Bell
1777 Bay St
Victoria, BC V8R 2B9

jessie_785@icloud.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 8:57:45 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Tasia Henton
1216 Waveland Ave
Waveland, MS 39576-2914

peppergirl@bellsouth.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 9:04:01 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Johanna Johnston
110 E Killingly Rd
Foster, RI 02825-1432

jjohnston30@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 9:04:20 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Jane Walton
46 Mornington Court
Fall River, ME 04123
[REDACTED]
jainandcharles@me.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 9:04:20 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Maia Anderson
884 Kearney Ter
Sunnyvale, CA 94086-5948
[REDACTED]
nightling@icloud.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 9:04:21 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Vianey Bojorquez
1836 E Edgewood Ave
Mesa, AZ 85204-4402
[REDACTED]
uniquevna@live.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 9:04:22 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Charles D. Kerr
380 Devon St
Kearny, NJ 07032-2613
[REDACTED]
cdk148@comcast.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 9:04:23 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Craig Carter
2403 N Wallen Dr
West Palm Beach, FL 33410-2509

coastalhomeimprovement@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 9:25:54 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Brad Weiss
2116 Camino Laurel
San Clemente, CA 92673-5650

jetsurferweiss@cox.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 9:26:04 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Adrienne McQuade
308 Hazel Dr
Bristol, VT 05443-4300
[REDACTED]
adrienne.e.m@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 9:26:20 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Jennifer Valenti
3747 Brookshire St
San Diego, CA 92111-4144
[REDACTED]
jennvalenti@rocketmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 9:26:23 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Pepper Ackers
2514 Via Venicia Apt 2813
Fort Worth, TX 76109-5584

pdackers7@sbcglobal.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 9:27:29 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. cathi soule
3005 Coyote Cir
Clayton, CA 94517-1940
[REDACTED]
sneath@pacbell.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 9:33:50 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Lisa Durling
201 W 13 Mile Rd
Royal Oak, MI 48073-2561
[REDACTED]
ladurling@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 9:35:30 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Tomi Gibson
1711 Carolyn Dr
Lexington, KY 40502-1011
[REDACTED]
tomig0511@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 9:36:11 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Barbara Peterlin
9156 S Winchester Ave #
Chicago, IL 60643-6015
[REDACTED]
bpeterlin76@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 9:55:59 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Aarahwanna Roe
3567 Montreal Way
Tucker, GA 30084-8219
[REDACTED]
aroe@emory.edu

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 9:56:02 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Jessica Rivera
12941 NW 2nd St
Pembroke Pines, FL 33028-2295
[REDACTED]
jessnjuan2012@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 9:56:06 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Marcy Chamblin
PO Box 185132
Hamden, CT 06518-0132
[REDACTED]
claypoolefineart@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 9:56:18 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Patricia Stefancic
1655 Jennie St
Menasha, WI 54952-2156
[REDACTED]
ellonwee@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 9:56:20 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Gina Ghidotti
2150 S State College Blvd Apt 2079
Anaheim, CA 92806-0126
[REDACTED]
genebean90266@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 9:56:29 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Struan McArdle
2612 Ripplewood Dr
Dallas, TX 75228-5114

struan.mcardle@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 9:56:30 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely, Sherrill Faunce

Sincerely,

Mrs. Sherrill Faunce
520 E 2nd St
Moorestown, NJ 08057-3004
[REDACTED]
scfaunce@icloud.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 9:56:41 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Rose Modiano
30 Westwood Rd
Lincoln, RI 02865-3115

rose.modiano@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 9:56:55 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss maegan gagne
2142 E Johnson St
Apt 1
Madison, WI 53704-4710
[REDACTED]
magagne1@plymouth.edu

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 9:57:01 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Helen Moteles
2318 Rosemore Ave
Apt L11
Glenside, PA 19038-4115
[REDACTED]
helen.windrush@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 9:57:05 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Michael Kowalski
5510 W Plainfield Ave
Milwaukee, WI 53220-3147
[REDACTED]
ekim55102@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 9:57:17 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Elizabeth Howard
PO Box 14305
Gainesville, FL 32604-2305
[REDACTED]
holisticliz@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 9:57:20 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Marylynn Miller
125 Sand Dunes Dr
Ormond Beach, FL 32176-2183
[REDACTED]
marylynn.t.miller@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 10:03:54 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Lauralee Kirkpatrick
13450 Applerose Ln
Orlando, FL 32824-6154
[REDACTED]
tapdawg15@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 10:04:10 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Caitlyn Fraser
6 High Avenue
6
LETCHEWORTH GARDEN CITY, None SG6 3RL
[REDACTED]
kitty99kat@hotmail.co.uk

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 10:26:00 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Shelley Kilbon
4575 Keota Pl
Loveland, CO 80538-1453
[REDACTED]
gwyddon33@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 10:26:11 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Shannon Bakros
1940 Jenkins Dr
Easton, PA 18040-7581
[REDACTED]
shaniscrabby@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 10:26:35 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Cindy Arblaster
2448 Skidmore Rd
Greensburg, PA 15601-5843

cindyarblaster@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 10:26:50 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Nellie K. Adaba

n/a

Yonkers, NY 10701

nelliek.adaba@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 10:26:52 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. jude sky
Kensington
Kensington, CA 94708

jksky747@runbox.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 10:27:16 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Mandie Masley
291 Rick Rd
Milford, NJ 08848-2140
[REDACTED]
eidnaml@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 10:27:17 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Ketty R. Owens
12442 Sunnyglen Dr
Moorpark, CA 93021-2777
[REDACTED]
kettyowens@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 10:33:17 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Anna Cordova
2203 Alco Dr
Santa Maria, CA 93458-1400
[REDACTED]
acordova3kitties@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 10:33:46 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Paula Baker
120 S Raab Rd
Swanton, OH 43558-9332
[REDACTED]
dustybug69@embarqmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 10:33:51 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Zoraya Michel
1710 Lafayette Ave Apt 6c
Bronx, NY 10473-4128

zram98@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 10:33:51 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Shannon Sloan
PO Box 62
Beecher City, IL 62414-0062
[REDACTED]
paulshan.sloan@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 10:33:59 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Ruthanne Berry
2006 Grove Ave
Richmond, VA 23220-4534

ruthanneberry@earthlink.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 10:34:03 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. ilisa elkin
821 State Route 57 Apt B
Stewartsville, NJ 08886-2102
[REDACTED] illisae123@juno.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 10:34:08 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Dan Marks
105 N Rowland St
Richmond, VA 23220-4539

fandan@comcast.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 10:56:11 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Mike Diaz
122 W 137th St
New York, NY 10030-2524
[REDACTED]
diazrocksq@aim.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 10:57:13 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Laurie Youngleson-Lammerse
39 Lagoon Dve
Salt Rock, FL 33152-3882
[REDACTED]
lauri@iafrica.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 10:57:30 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Jeannie Larson
304 Arbor Creek Bd.
Nashville, TN 37217-5057
[REDACTED]
jeanniiee@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 11:26:06 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Kristin Minett
Adams ave
Staten island, NY 10306
[REDACTED]
dkny5181@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 11:26:17 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Brie Starost
7200 W Saint Andrews Ave
Yorktown, IN 47396-9233
[REDACTED]
briebelle411@comcast.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 11:26:34 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist these beautiful panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Amy Bashforth
5446 Hessler Cir
Hilliard, OH 43026-8918
[REDACTED]
amyraeb@sbcglobal.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 11:26:50 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Tomoko Bando
1-32-1 Honshukucho Fuchu
Tokyo, None 1830032
[REDACTED]
fze01076@nifty.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 11:26:59 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Laura Kahn
1190 Garden Rd
Milford, MI 48381-2520
[REDACTED]
lchelle114@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 11:27:15 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Mary Chauvin
125 Senora Ct
Saint Augustine, FL 32095-4838
[REDACTED]
mchauvin14@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 11:27:23 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Pat Frazier
24101 Old Bellamy Rd
High Springs, FL 32643-8931
[REDACTED]
harleypf@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 11:27:24 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Janet Wood
4002 Garfield Ave
Hamburg, NY 14075-2921
[REDACTED]
the1woodchuck@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 11:27:24 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Rhonda Burch
214 Center St
Groveland, MA 01834-1752
[REDACTED]
psrsvdjf1@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 11:33:52 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Kimberly Oates
4528 Yarmouth Ct
Virginia Beach, VA 23455-5531
[REDACTED]
lavenderlegacy@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 11:33:59 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Sara Cotten
339 Brookside Dr
Downingtown, PA 19335-4614
[REDACTED] dancer6579@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 11:34:03 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Marisa Kieren
1517 Glencrest Dr
San Jose, CA 95118-1617
[REDACTED]
ninermk@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 11:56:35 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. John Collins
100 Washington Dr
New Hartford, NY 13413-1020
[REDACTED]
jshadow1048@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 11:56:35 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Judy Dunigan
PO Box 1292
Mc Gill, NV 89318-1292

j.dunigan@att.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 11:56:37 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Robert Killeen
50 E Bellevue Pl
Apt 1501
Chicago, IL 60611-6114
[REDACTED]
robteugenek@sbcglobal.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 11:56:37 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Michael Stanislovitis
4 Boothby Cir
Randolph, MA 02368-5313
[REDACTED]
mstanislovitis@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 11:56:54 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Michael Wright
101 Gallery Way
Tustin, CA 92782-1109

mdwright1919@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 11:56:58 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Jessica Delaney
56 Heritage Way
Kirkland, QC H9J 2N2
[REDACTED]
ssejdelaney@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 11:56:59 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Angela Bailey
1234 Main ST
Grand Blanc, MI 48439
[REDACTED]
abailey4413@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2017 11:57:03 PM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Roxanna Locario
9925 Pumpkin Ridge Ct
Austin, TX 78717-3830
[REDACTED]
roxlocario@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 12:02:52 AM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Daniel de la Casa
11639 Boulton Ave
San Diego, CA 92128-4286
[REDACTED]
danydelahouse@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 12:03:44 AM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. abby baird
339 Bedford Ave
Brooklyn, NY 11211-8858

abaird1215@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 12:04:00 AM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Lisa Jackson
816 E 6th St
Loveland, CO 80537-5706

lmja61@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 12:04:02 AM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Janet Wooldridge
2312 Fruitdale Ave
San Jose, CA 95128-3431
[REDACTED]
janetwooldridge@comcast.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 12:04:04 AM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Amy Aldridge
8500 E Keating Park St
Lot B26
Floral City, FL 34436-2892
[REDACTED]
amymichelefl@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 12:26:36 AM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Monica Barricarte
54 Del Sol Ct
San Luis Obispo, CA 93401-7707
[REDACTED]
mbarricarte@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 12:26:41 AM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Felicity Winters
PO Box 622
Conway, NH 03818-0622
[REDACTED]
felicitywinters1972@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 12:26:41 AM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Veronica Calcara
45 Coal Center Rd
Bentleyville, PA 15314-1602
[REDACTED]
vcalcara@atlanticbb.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 12:56:22 AM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Song Riley
415 Pine Tree Dr
Indialantic, FL 32903-3848

rileysong@bellsouth.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 12:56:26 AM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Amanda Hoffert
20234 Sugar Gum Rd
Riverside, CA 92508-3008
[REDACTED]
amandabarber312@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 12:56:30 AM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Cynthia Pripusich
1325 Oakland Cir
North Aurora, IL 60542-1766
[REDACTED]
winntash@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 12:56:30 AM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Marissa Bird
1012 E Thoroughbred Ln
Spokane, WA 99208-6737
[REDACTED]
birdolini@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 12:56:32 AM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Joan Mettler
68 Lippard Ave
San Francisco, CA 94131-2947

joanmettler@sbcglobal.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 12:56:56 AM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Susan Soble
193 Boxwood Dr
Hawthorn Woods, IL 60047-8912

sfsoble@comcast.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 12:57:11 AM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Leslie Jaspersen
7309 Woodbridge Dr
Forest Hill, TX 76140-2050
[REDACTED]
lesliejaspersen@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 1:04:01 AM

Aug 10, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Allison Johnson
1585 Warrior Ln
Waukegan, IA 50263-8651

katali25@netzero.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 1:04:08 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Beth Borland
8722 N Druid Ave
Portland, OR 97203-3509
503749413
beth.a.borland@icloud.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 1:04:13 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Tara Tretter
801 NW Capelle St
Grain Valley, MO 64029-8303
[REDACTED]
taratretter@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 1:26:44 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Deb Smoth
86 Sandlewood Dr
Madison, CT 06443-2257
[REDACTED]
sasj78@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 1:41:53 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. karen pazdowski
4331 Reeder Ave
Oxnard, CA 93033-8040
[REDACTED]
kpazdowski@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 1:56:27 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Elizabeth Duggan
144 Cross Street
West Footscray, None 3012
[REDACTED]
eaduggan@optusnet.com.au

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 1:56:43 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Christy Birch
3956 Sweetwater Dr
San Leandro, CA 94578-4927
[REDACTED]
christybirch705@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 1:56:58 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Tim Leakey
15 Magpie Close
St Leonards On sea, None TN38 8DY
00441424441360 timaleakey@btinternet.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 2:03:21 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Roger Dallan
4022 Madelia Ave
Sherman Oaks, CA 91403-4625
[REDACTED]
race@sbcglobal.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 2:04:01 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Qato Burkhart
11910 Venice Blvd Apt 1
Los Angeles, CA 90066-3970
[REDACTED]
qburkhart@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 2:26:25 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. C Tourangeau
14737 Allegiance Dr
Colorado Springs, CO 80921-4807
[REDACTED]
ctourangeau@earthlink.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 2:56:33 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Alexis Howard
5838 SE 60th Ave
Portland, OR 97206-6014
[REDACTED]
alexisahoward@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 2:56:40 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Caroline Ward
10 Davidson Avenue
Crafers, None 005152
[REDACTED]
padfields@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 3:04:04 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Boris Rappoport
Shlomo Ben Yosef str ., 22 / 5
Bnei Brak, IL 51280
[REDACTED]
sergeychyb@rambler.ru

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 3:04:05 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Linda E Zsoner
26152 Constantine Rd
Punta Gorda, FL 33983-2607

zsonerlinda@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 3:56:49 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Kimberly McAfee
1137 Lacasa Ave
Yuba City, CA 95991-5726

mcafeekim89@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 4:26:41 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection. Protecting these beautiful panthers for all of us is the right thing to do.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Zana Shreve
1540 Crown Rd
Petaluma, CA 94954-1487
[REDACTED]
zanadevi@sbcglobal.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 4:26:46 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Verena Kalandra
Kolbegasse 45/4
Vienna, None 12300
[REDACTED]
verena.kalandra@gmx.at

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 4:56:46 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. GINO PASTORINO
DEL NORTE LN
DALLAS, TX 75242

manonfiredeepimpact@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 5:04:25 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Joe Fisch
1954 Linda Flora Dr
Los Angeles, CA 90077-1405
[REDACTED] jftvf1@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 5:26:48 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Edwin Glover
1878 Camberley Ln
Hacienda Heights, CA 91745-5812
[REDACTED]
glover.edwin@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 5:56:39 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Donna Ridley
10 Shaftoe Way,
Dinnington, None NE13 7LX
[REDACTED]
donnaridley2002@yahoo.co.uk

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 6:04:34 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Miranda Leiva
4950 Coldwater Canyon Ave
Sherman Oaks, CA 91423-2279

mwolfi@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 6:26:45 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Maria Cascajares

...

..

Bilbao, None 48002

mariacs@outlook.es

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 6:26:49 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Denise Suters
5036 46th West
Miami, FL 33931
[REDACTED]
denise.suters@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 6:26:56 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Wojciech Dawid
Bursche 6
Kalisz, None 62-
wojciech_lu@wp.pl

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 6:34:14 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Anton Dipl.-Ing. Brueckler
Hauptstrasse 82
Jennersdorf, None 8380

anton.brueckler@infineon.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 6:57:01 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Chris Calabrese
380 Old Waterbury Rd
Apt 3
Southbury, CT 06488-1843
[REDACTED]
glickfix1@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 7:04:33 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Claudia Häske
Markstr
Bochum, AK 44801
[REDACTED]
claudia.haeske@unitybox.de

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 7:04:36 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Dee Shl
Constance
Andovee, MN 55304
[REDACTED]
debroachgb@msn.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 7:04:43 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Robert Blanchard
3785 Beeman Rd
Williamston, MI 48895-9352
[REDACTED]
rblanc1954@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 7:04:49 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Marie Sydney
115 Chaplin Crescent
Toronto, ON M5P1A6

marie.sydney@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 7:26:48 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. sharmini sewpersad
vredenberg estate
Cape Town, None 71300
[REDACTED]
sharmini@medis.co.za

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 7:26:59 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Paige Galligher
735 Keen Ave
Ashland, OH 44805-3630
[REDACTED]
pgalligh@ashland.edu

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 7:27:10 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Tania Glazer
6000 Devonshire Rd
Harrisburg, PA 17112-3514
[REDACTED]
tania@glazercreative.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 7:27:30 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Maureen Gall
1370 Pawprint Ct
Colorado Springs, CO 80921-3703
[REDACTED]
Moluggagecart@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 7:27:38 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Ellen Govers
Neerstraat 40
13
Tessenderlo, None 3945
4865214865155 r0381314@student.luca-arts.be

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 7:34:16 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Kathryn Knight
11618 Hickory Ln
Tavares, FL 32778-4710
[REDACTED]
jkknightent@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 7:58:01 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Kelly Reed
4051 Burlington Ave N
St Petersburg, FL 33713-8309
[REDACTED]
kellynr09@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 8:04:54 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Esther Juhl
Lüdenscheider Weg 5g
Berlin, None 13599
[REDACTED]
estherjuhl@googlemail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 8:04:54 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Joy Shaffer
628 W Diversey Ave
Addison, IL 60101-3248
[REDACTED]
feathernymph@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 8:05:00 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Vanessa Benages Riera
Onze de setembro, 5
El Pla de Santa Maria, None 43814
691442402 vane_0407@msn.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 8:27:05 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Roobhen Chanderan
Jalan Setia Raja
Kuching, None 93350
[REDACTED]
roobhen91@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 8:27:17 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Astrid Keup
Loehrbachsgraben 5
Allendorf, AL 35469
[REDACTED]
astridkeup@mac.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 8:27:25 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Debra Jones
1074 Mobile St
Lake Geneva, WI 53147-2408
[REDACTED]
jjones1239@wi.rr.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 8:27:26 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. candice tharp
17sbobwhiter d
wildwood, FL 34785

candytharp55@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 8:27:41 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Laura Oettinger
PO Box 523
Speonk, NY 11972-0523
[REDACTED]
oettingerwl@optonline.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 8:34:37 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Cheryl McFaden
3416 Viewridge Cir
Manchester, MD 21102-1529
[REDACTED]
cherylmcfaden@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 8:34:46 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Jon Guilaroff
5532 W 117th St
Inglewood, CA 90304-1062

yojonboy@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 8:34:48 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Brittany Stone
2389 ST RT 124
Coolville, OH 45723
74473376 brittany.stone@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 8:57:39 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Arthur Berger
270 Provincial Dr
Indialantic, FL 32903-2330
[REDACTED]
ajb5sully@att.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 8:57:40 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Mary Biggins
170 Van Winkle St
East Rutherford, NJ 07073-1829
[REDACTED]
jackies70chevy@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 8:57:40 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Kurt Rothwell
6701 Levi Rd
Hixson, TN 37343-2630

kdrothwell@tva.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 8:57:49 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Jahannah W Trezevant
258 W 139th St
New York, NY 10030-2109

jwtrezevant@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 8:57:50 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Susan Grulee
1220 Palmetto Ct
Vero Beach, FL 32963-3630

sgrulee@live.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 8:57:51 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Diana Garmon
346 Caloosa Ct
Lake Wales, FL 33859-8601
[REDACTED]
dianagarmon@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 9:05:11 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Barb Arana
8225 Drew St
Englewood, FL 34224-8291
[REDACTED]
aranab1941@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 9:05:13 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Kristen Cibulas
111 mxndndnd
Staven, CT 06512

kecibulas@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 9:27:21 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Birgit Neumeier
Knackenau21
münchen, None 82031
[REDACTED]
bneumeier@web.de

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 9:27:22 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Christine Reynolds
55 S Downey Ave
Indianapolis, IN 46219-6403
[REDACTED]
car212@sbcglobal.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 9:27:27 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. eva moore
196 Mountain Rd
Alpha, NJ 08865-7706
[REDACTED]
kattdrgn@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 9:27:29 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Jennifer Barnhill
2032 Grant Ave
Saint Albans, WV 25177-1958
[REDACTED]
princessgal326@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 9:36:00 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Rachel Jones
3201 Landover St
Apt 417
Alexandria, VA 22305-1912
[REDACTED]
rachelajones77@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 9:57:13 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Deanna Drost
2730 Ramona Rd
Reno, NV 89521-8885
[REDACTED]
dqdrost@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 9:57:20 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Hazel Camargo
8415 Sycamore Tree Dr
Apt 102a
Tampa, FL 33614-2123
[REDACTED]
hazelm125@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 9:57:21 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Miriam Aja
JI Jagakarsa 2
Jakarta, NY 12260
[REDACTED]
bahagijomiriam@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 9:57:29 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Dr. Tona Morrow
139 Woodlyn Ave
Willow Grove, PA 19090-3735

tomorrowtona@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 9:57:35 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Gary Cubler
335 Franklin St
Oxford, PA 19363-1713

j10m13c3n14p16s19@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 9:57:44 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Linda Avarello
Arenoso Lane
San Clemente, CA 92672-5282
[REDACTED]
onamissionto@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 9:57:45 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Jaime Marx
450 S Los Robles Ave Apt 6
Pasadena, CA 91101-3256
[REDACTED]
lhakthong@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 9:57:51 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Charles Havlik
860 Brookstone Ct
Jacksonville, FL 32259-4321

charleshavlik@msn.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 9:57:53 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Terry Callahan
4649 Carriage Crossing Dr
Jacksonville, FL 32258-1380

tlc01tc@aim.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 10:04:47 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Maureen Patrone
366 Randolph
Canton, MA 02021

mfpatrone51@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 10:04:51 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Sara Danzi
2217 E Seattle St
Broken Arrow, OK 74012-9367
[REDACTED]
sadanzi02@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 10:27:16 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Meghan Houston
312 Jefferson Ave
Lehigh Acres, FL 33936-1636
[REDACTED]
allene_7@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 10:27:43 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

I was fortunate enough to work in the Fahkahatchee Strand during the 1970's. Seeing a panther's footprint was an exciting event. Now I am a retired professor of wildlife ecology and I urge you to continue protection for these vital predators. The ecosystem needs to be in balance, and predators have an important role.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Dr. Barbara Reynolds
206 Chambwood Park
Apt E
Asheville, NC 28804-8208

reynolds.barbara@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 10:27:44 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Dr. Corey Wolff
1530 Airport Blvd
Pensacola, FL 32504-8616

info@wolffcenter.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 10:27:54 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Stephanie Hartl
Mozartring 11b
Baldham, None 85598
[REDACTED]
stephanie@voss-gmbh.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 10:28:17 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Jodi Lawaich
58 Dugway Rd
Waitsfield, VT 05673-6116

jlawaich@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 10:34:52 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Debbie Youngs
40 Park Pl
Newton, NJ 07860-1747

deborah.youngs@embarqmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 10:34:55 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Dr. Alice Harding
3605 Crestside Rd
Mountain Brk, AL 35223-1514
[REDACTED]
alicecareylaw@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 10:35:00 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Sabrina Rich
5572 Kaiser Rd Apt A
Fort Sill, OK 73503-1806
[REDACTED]
rockhound7149@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 10:35:02 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Remember, your grandchildren/great grandchildren will remember what you did - good or bad. I'm guessing they'd want you to save the panther.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Sally Shannon
122 Marinero Cir
Belvedere Tiburon, CA 94920-1628
[REDACTED]
sallyshannon122@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 10:57:59 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Katherine Bronsdon
224 Norfolk Ave
Pawtucket, RI 02861-2139
[REDACTED]
eeyorism78@mail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 10:58:03 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Shomla Begum
37 Clinton Ave
Stamford, CT 06901-3306

shoom234@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 10:58:03 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Susan Lunow
45 Rapple Dr
Albany, NY 12205-4714
[REDACTED]
slmpalette@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 10:58:04 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Michelle Delacourt
4226 Old Lincoln Hwy
Trevose, PA 19053-8444 mddel23@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 10:58:05 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Shelly Castellano
2564 Williamsbridge Rd
Bronx, NY 10469-4353
[REDACTED]
winnie1ny@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 10:58:06 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Karen Brennhofer
305 High Dr
Sartell, MN 56377-1208
[REDACTED]
jkbhawaii@msn.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 10:58:10 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Kristin Gallanosa
504 River Oak Dr
Danville, VA 24541-5820
[REDACTED]
gallanosak@live.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 10:58:12 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Dayan Monte
13205 SW 221 ST
Miami, FL 33189-3022
[REDACTED]
monterodayani@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 10:58:12 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Morgan Stein
11330 Blue Sage Pl
Lakewood Ranch, FL 34202-1865
[REDACTED]
mgs315@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 10:58:12 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Teresa Hammond
6725 San Luis Obispo Ave NE
Albuquerque, NM 87109-5624

trake22@comcast.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 10:58:12 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Els denhoed
Zeeweg 28
Oostvoorne, None 3233 CV
0031181-484276
elsdenhoed@xs4all.nl

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 10:58:14 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Debra Corbett
5189 Budd Rd
New Albany, IN 47150-9108

debra.corbett@ahsrockets.org

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 10:58:16 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Kathleen Amato
47 Dartmouth St
Garden City, NY 11530-5126
[REDACTED]
kamato27@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 11:04:57 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Sarah Paulsen
1401 Walnut Ln
Louisville, KY 40223-2446
[REDACTED]
cpaulsen412@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 11:05:06 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you

Nancy pinoli

Sincerely,

Ms. Nancy Pinoli
1888 Loquat Ave
Patterson, CA 95363-8502
[REDACTED]
mnpets@rocketmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 11:05:14 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Lindsey Harding
1171 Sparkle
Rochester Hills, MI 48306-3568
[REDACTED]
lindsey.harding82@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 11:27:48 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Phillip Cripps
35898 Calle Raphael
Cathedral City, CA 92234-7932

pcripps@roadrunner.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 11:27:57 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Tamara Gossard
1961 Sunshine Blvd Apt 2
Naples, FL 34116-6185
[REDACTED]
tgoss47@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 11:28:01 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Steven Pezzeca
3228 Chaucer St
Philadelphia, PA 19145-5840
[REDACTED]
stevenpezzeca1@icloud.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 11:28:09 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Mary McIntyre
3234 Whispering Willow Ln
Danville, IA 52623-9418
[REDACTED]
ichellemcintyre56@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 11:28:24 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Our goal must be preserve and protect! Once these beautiful animals are gone, they are gone forever!!!!

Sincerely,

Ms. Janet Harvath
4 Berkeley St
Whiting, NJ 08759-3246

jharvath630@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 11:28:40 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Kimberly Stevens
940 29th St
Richmond, CA 94804-1304
[REDACTED]
kstevensca@earthlink.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 11:28:40 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Eleanor Verrette
365 Bishop St
Framingham, MA 01702-6564
[REDACTED]
petite.verrette@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 11:28:44 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Regine Ruelle
Ultramar 97
Jávea, None 03730
[REDACTED]
reginersl@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 11:34:42 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. John Strickler
2208 Valmont St
New Orleans, LA 70115-6459
[REDACTED]
jcstrickler3@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 11:35:26 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Antoni Font
fadrins 35
sa pobla, None 07420
655868996 tonifont85@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 11:35:27 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Natalie Rawlings
1721 S 2100 W
Mapleton, UT 84664-4248
[REDACTED]
rawlingsnatalie@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 11:40:40 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Rosemary

Sincerely,

Ms. Rosemary Zingarelli
5342 N Moody Ave
Chicago, IL 60630-1049
[REDACTED]
rzingar87@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 11:57:35 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Kathi Keller
2500 Belvue Rd
Waynesboro, VA 22980-2100
[REDACTED]
kathi1_va@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 11:57:41 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. MIKE Vincent
596 Driggs Ave
Brooklyn, NY 11211-3231
[REDACTED]
jasfilm@global.co.za

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 11:57:42 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Pamela Schmidt
5560 Heathergreen Ct Apt D
Willoughby, OH 44094-3223
[REDACTED]
pamela.aloha@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 11:57:42 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Leigh Rogal
521 Barbee Way
Danville, KY 40422-1547
[REDACTED]
leigh.rogal@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 11:57:53 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Kate Lenthall
PO Box 332
Wawarsing, NY 12489-0332
[REDACTED]
sleepinglioness@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 11:57:53 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Debra Nikolova
PO Box 104
West Hyannisport, MA 02672-0104
[REDACTED]
d.nikolova@aim.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 11:58:01 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Joseph Pastore
14039 34th Ave
Flushing, NY 11354-3054
[REDACTED]
jpastore46@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 11:58:01 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

We need to protect all the critters.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Rosemary Trospen
1772 Montgomery Rd
Thousand Oaks, CA 91360-5035

rtcharger74@roadrunner.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 11:58:05 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Janet Fennessy
5914 Plover Rd
Venice, FL 34293-6644
[REDACTED]
jfenn6043@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 12:27:34 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Abel Tapiero
414 Galveston Rd
Brownsville, TX 78521-1708

atapiero@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 12:27:41 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. John Stimson
4484 Hazeltine Ave
Sherman Oaks, CA 91423-2863

johnstimson@msn.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 12:27:50 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Dr. James Kline
PO Box 641
Bayfield, CO 81122-0641

jamesakline@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 12:28:00 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Joyce Winebrenner
5431 NW 167th St
Miami Gardens, FL 33055-3925
[REDACTED]
jopalw@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 12:28:01 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. nathan hundemann
PO Box 1272
West Dover, VT 05356-1272
[REDACTED]
nathmann@myfairpoint.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 12:28:10 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Katlyn Grieve
1890 Silver Lake Ave
Cuyahoga Falls, OH 44223-1752
[REDACTED]
kgrieve1@kent.edu

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 12:28:28 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Linda Wyatt-Baird
2241 Greensprings Dr Unit 10
Klamath Falls, OR 97601-5656
[REDACTED]
spookypirate1975@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 12:28:37 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Tianna Spooner
8 Paul Ct
Centereach, NY 11720-4381
[REDACTED]
tiannaspooner@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 12:28:39 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

This is a time when we should be increasing protection of these vulnerable animals, and certainly not decreasing protection.

Sincerely,

Mr. David Rosenfeld
1746 Ocean Ave
Brooklyn, NY 11230-5401
[REDACTED]
dvdlr6314@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 12:34:57 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Julie Solell
2918 Marsann Ln
Dallas, TX 75234-5016

jools0099@tx.rr.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 12:35:05 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Teresa Annunziata
PO Box 635
Branford, CT 06405-0635
[REDACTED]
lagatamala44@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 12:35:08 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,
Janis Suess
2382 Bainmar Drive
Lehigh Acres, Florida 33973

Sincerely,

Ms. Janis Suess
2382 Bainmar Dr
Lehigh Acres, FL 33973-6070
[REDACTED]
jansuess23@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 12:35:12 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Deborah Costas
100 Whitby Dr
Wilmington, DE 19803-2213
[REDACTED]
deborah_costas@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 12:58:05 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Sarah McDonald
1186 8th Fairway Ln
Huddleston, VA 24104-3550
[REDACTED]
macmolly2@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 12:58:07 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. David McKenzie
12337 Bluewing Ct
Poway, CA 92064-5341
[REDACTED]
cmckenzie2@cox.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 12:58:11 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Linda Holden
1451 S Greenville Ave
Apt 4305
Allen, TX 75002-4193
[REDACTED]
linda_holden2003@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 12:58:17 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Lauren Devine
1377 Walnut Ter
Boca Raton, FL 33486-6909
[REDACTED]
lrdevine@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 12:58:21 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Jai Ray
637 Main st.
Cape Girardeau, MO 63701
[REDACTED]
jray23@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 12:58:25 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Aimee Depue
PO Box 38
Vail, CO 81658-0038

aimee@larkspurcreative.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 12:58:27 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. dallas fairbanks
PO Box 1438
Tahoe City, CA 96145-1438

fairdathm@earthlink.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 12:58:28 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Kara Hafkey
6724 35th Pl S
Seattle, WA 98118-6454
[REDACTED]
karahafkey@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 1:05:47 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Pat Fifield
560 Ninth St
Nanaimo, BC V9R 6G5
[REDACTED]
phaychelsea@shaw.ca

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 1:05:55 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection. 200 is not a big number when it comes to a species

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Kelley Davis
44 Piney Branch Way Apt B
West Melbourne, FL 32904-3955
[REDACTED]
kelleylou59@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 1:05:57 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection. 200 is an extremely small population, they are certainly endangered. Please protect this beautiful, magnificent animal.

Thank you, Michele

Sincerely,

Ms. Michele Andrade
2207 71st St W
Bradenton, FL 34209-5451
[REDACTED]
michelemygal@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 1:05:59 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Linda Sieffert
5880 Leeds Ln
Davie, FL 33331-3245
[REDACTED]
sieffert@bellsouth.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 1:05:59 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. j p dayton oh
dayton, OH 45419
[REDACTED]
bishop17@sbcglobal.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 1:27:59 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Ilene Furgang
10135 SW 1st Ct
Coral Springs, FL 33071-7347
[REDACTED]
sandi99@gate.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 1:28:05 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Shannon Morrison
39 Cedar Ave
Cocoa Beach, FL 32931-2821
[REDACTED]
bakemeacake08@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 1:28:07 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Crystal Wrycza
710 106th Ave N
Naples, FL 34108-1850
[REDACTED]
wryczacl@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 1:28:07 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Carol Baumann
1105 NW 73rd Ter
Margate, FL 33063-3321
[REDACTED]
carolria@earthlink.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 1:28:12 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Jessica DelOrefice
PO Box 1201
Oaks, PA 19456-1201
no
jess.delorefice@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 1:28:13 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Suzy Berkowitz
14178 North Rd
Loxahatchee, FL 33470-4601
[REDACTED]
soozbee83@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 1:28:23 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Florencia Liori
Scoseria 2818
Montevideo, None 11300
27111934
flore_valen@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 1:28:28 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Gloria Potiah
260 Arlington St
Mineola, NY 11501-2102
[REDACTED]
gpotiah@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 1:35:04 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Jeffrey Anderson
465 Utah St
San Francisco, CA 94110-1443
415 jefreeanderson@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 1:35:07 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. sinikka tollefsen
kråvasslia 205
flaktveit, None 5134
41369148 bjorn.tollefsen4@gmail.no

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 1:35:08 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you. We need to stop over populating the world and to make room for other species to thrive.

Sincerely,

Ms. Gail Flanders
2509 Indian Mound Trl
Coral Gables, FL 33134-5526
[REDACTED]
gail1992@att.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 1:35:09 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Ash Rawal
132 Station Road
Derby, None DE3 9FN

ash.rawal@btopenworld.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 1:35:12 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Sarah Yoo
55 Anonymous Road
Toronto, ON M2e1k9
[REDACTED]
sarahyoo92@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 1:35:19 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Jamie Harbron
2342 W Bloomingdale Ave Apt 402
Chicago, IL 60647-5616
[REDACTED]
jwharbron@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 1:57:59 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Marie DiMassa
3725 Myrtle Ave
Long Beach, CA 90807-4121
[REDACTED]
medimassa@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 1:58:03 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Christine Vadney
2752 State Highway 7
Otego, NY 13825-2192
[REDACTED]
stormhunter1969@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 1:58:03 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Ellen Knight
18330 SW 204th St
Miami, FL 33187-3318

detknight@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 1:58:04 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

The developers want to take them off the list so they can PAVE OVER more of Florida with tacky condos. This is DESPICABLE.

<http://www.mypalmbeachpost.com/news/state--regional-govt--politics/forget-panthers-most-protected-species-florida-the-developer/3IfUIP3sFFtEgVHDp6sddl/>

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Pam Smith
9460 Poinciana Pl
Davie, FL 33324-4879
[REDACTED]
afelinefan@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 1:58:12 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Nadia Herrera
3906 N Central Ave
Chicago, IL 60634-2724

nduran1306@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 2:05:19 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Cassie T
7781 Northpointe Blvd
Pensacola, FL 32514-6536
[REDACTED]
cassiegslover@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 2:05:23 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Helen Dambrosi
4840 SW 25th Ave
Ft Lauderdale, FL 33312-5936
[REDACTED]
heluweels713@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 2:05:29 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Steve Hansen
6500 Mirrored Scene Cou
Sykesville, MD 21784
[REDACTED]
smhhansen@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 2:05:32 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. cathy pardee
55 Moon Ridge Ln
Burlington, WV 26710-9661
[REDACTED]
cathypardee@frontiernet.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 2:27:47 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Helen Rogers
5100 SW 90th Ave
Apt 203
Cooper City, FL 33328-3630
[REDACTED]
harog004@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 2:27:48 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

PLEASE! I was raised down in Florida and have seen not only my town of Kissimmee explode with people and development BUT the loss of habitat for animals. I REMEMBER growing up listening to the sound of a Whip-or-will bird. THEY ARE GONE, got chased out of their habitat.

PLEASE DO NOT delist the Florida panther. THEY DESERVE a chance to survive in their natural habitat!

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Teresa Tario
1308 Melody Dr
Green Bay, WI 54303-6422
[REDACTED]
eert80@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 2:27:51 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Susan Dohr
7319 Sharp Ave
Saint Louis, MO 63116-3039
[REDACTED]
susandohr@ymail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 2:28:14 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Dr. patricia tibbitts
923 N 38th St Apt 505
Omaha, NE 68131-1235
[REDACTED]
pattibbitts1936@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 2:28:15 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Kim Argula
3126 Shattuck Ave
Berkeley, CA 94705-1823
[REDACTED]
kimargula@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 2:28:16 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Chelsea Krebs
1548 SE 12th Ct
Fort Lauderdale, FL 33316-2204
[REDACTED]
aerodelite7@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 2:35:04 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Juanita Fernandez
105 Bramble Ln
Aliso Viejo, CA 92656-2932
[REDACTED]
captainm4me@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 2:35:09 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Katherine Rogers
120 Sunset Beach Rd
Sag Harbor, NY 11963-1015
[REDACTED]
katebates14@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 2:35:26 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Michelle Hopper
213 Brownstone Dr
Englewood, OH 45322-1709
[REDACTED]
mitchel87@woh.rr.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 2:57:35 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Lisa Hertel
Vischer ferry road
Rexford, NY 12148
[REDACTED]
lhertel@nycap.rr.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 2:57:37 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Kimberly Park
1336 1/2 W Estes Ave
Apt 2w
Chicago, IL 60626-5370
[REDACTED]
kkern_11@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 2:57:41 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Kim Auxilien
1181 Brook Ct
Mandeville, LA 70448-7411
[REDACTED]
volleyfan101@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 2:57:56 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Nicholas Huss
14 Overbrook Rd
Somerset, NJ 08873-2253
[REDACTED]
trainernick2011@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 2:58:02 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Kay Kaplan
28 Starlight
Irvine, CA 92603-3722
[REDACTED]
kaplankay@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 2:58:47 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Iwona Torosdag
16 Buckingham Dr
Egg Harbor Township, NJ 08234-7253
[REDACTED]
iwona48@comcast.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 3:05:22 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Tharuka Sandaruwan
No 161, Kanampella, Kosgama
Kosgama, None 10730
[REDACTED]
meedeniyats@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 3:27:42 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Cornelia Abedini
Blumenstr.6
Gundelfingen, None 79194
0049761589350 liberty60@live.de

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 3:27:46 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Peter Pray
240 Barbara Blvd
Felton, DE 19943-5735

petecpray@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 3:27:51 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Aimee Charbonneau
5505 N Rampart St
New Orleans, LA 70117-2501
[REDACTED]
acharbo@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 3:27:51 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Maralee Kilts
PO Box 112
216 S Church St
Udall, KS 67146-0112

maraleekilts@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 3:27:53 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Meagan Fastuca
1792 Lenox Ave
East Meadow, NY 11554-4052
[REDACTED]
meagan.fastuca@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 3:27:55 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Michelle Prins
1625 Dale Cir S
Dunedin, FL 34698-4732
[REDACTED]
mprins@wowway.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 3:27:55 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Raven Vergara
Bay Boulevard
Indian Rocks Beach, FL 33785
[REDACTED]
blueanimewulf13@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 3:27:56 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Lisa Puleo
3662 Maria St
Las Vegas, NV 89121-3557

pawsforthoughtlv@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 3:27:57 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. michele kulin
2010 Gray Rd
Lapeer, MI 48446-8903

m.lkulin@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 3:35:19 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection. Too much of their habitat has been destroyed by commercial and residential building, leaving our panthers continually challenged to survive. More panther deaths on roadways have been documented in recent years, than there are panther birth. Help us preserve the future of this iconic, indigenous species.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Rebecca DeWinter - Abdow
2139 SE 8th Ave
Cape Coral, FL 33990-2558
[REDACTED]
bekkat50@msn.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 3:35:25 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Maryrose Keenan
Granite rd
Guilford, CT 06437
[REDACTED]
mrosek2003@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 3:35:43 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Rebecca Ballentine-Harris
10298 Bruno Rd
Thornville, OH 43076-9735
[REDACTED]
rballentine333@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 3:57:54 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Marissa Ferraro
841 N West Blvd
Massapequa, NY 11758-3450
[REDACTED]
msconzo@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 3:57:57 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Lisa Schafer
17436 Road 38
Madera, CA 93636-8221
[REDACTED]
lschafer23@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 3:58:00 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Summer Manges
99 Neeley St
Berea, KY 40403-1797
[REDACTED]
mousie@cheerful.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 3:58:06 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Maxwell Lasher
17 Savoy Rd
Newark, DE 19702-8615
[REDACTED]
maxlasher2012@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 3:58:16 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Erin Valentine
2410 Chapel Hill Rd
Durham, NC 27707-1424

erinvalentine@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 4:05:20 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Gelisa Rivera
8887 Montclair Ave
Hesperia, CA 92344-5549
[REDACTED]
elisag123@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 4:05:29 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Jack McManus
10 Skyline Dr
Braintree, MA 02184-1161
[REDACTED]
jmac1214@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 4:27:41 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Barbara Wilson
1025 W 11th St
Port Angeles, WA 98363-7208
[REDACTED]
bwilson@olympen.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 4:27:46 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Dr. Colleen Farmer
4106 Oglethorpe St
Hyattsville, MD 20782-3025

cfarmer@umd.edu

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 4:28:09 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Mary Arnold
1118 Governors Way
Vero Beach, FL 32963-3652
[REDACTED]
arnoldmt@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 4:28:10 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Kathy Spina
7472 London Ave
Rancho Cucamonga, CA 91730-1416
[REDACTED]
cucamongakat@charter.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 4:28:25 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Antonio Banares
amora 25
Villaviciosa Odón, None 28670 Spain
659577872 antoniobanares@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 4:35:22 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Frank Asturino
5679 Steubenville Pike
56
Mc Kees Rocks, PA 15136-1415
[REDACTED]
tt.id70@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 4:57:37 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Tiffany Schilling
5005 71st Dr NE
Marysville, WA 98270-6938
281386931 tdschilling@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 4:57:52 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Donna Webster
1301 Interstate 35 S Apt 18
West, TX 76691-1786

dswebster01@icloud.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 4:58:01 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Kyle Noeske
W124s6374 Hawthorne Rd
Muskego, WI 53150-3029
[REDACTED]
piratek@wi.rr.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 4:58:10 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Deborah Lawrence
5223 Millenia Blvd
Apt 101
Orlando, FL 32839-6137
[REDACTED]
deborah.lawrence004@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 4:58:14 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

I will never understand people who think that nature and wildlife doesn't matter. Please protect this beautiful animal.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Dawn Weiss
1505 Parknoll Ln
Port Washington, WI 53074-1125
[REDACTED]
honeyweiss300@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 4:58:18 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Bob Jackson
511 Cottage Rd
South Portland, ME 04106-5017
[REDACTED]
bobjackson34@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 4:58:18 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Barbara Recht
15 Manchester Ct
Ramsey, NJ 07446-2115
[REDACTED]
berecht@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 4:58:22 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Christine McDaniel
302 S Hazel Ave
Ames, IA 50010-6936
[REDACTED]
aiacmcd@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 4:58:25 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Rene' Legrand
286 Mulberry Rd
Frankfort, IL 60423-1212
[REDACTED]
grlegrand@att.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 4:58:33 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. James Sherman
PO Box 1154
Quechee, VT 05059-1154

jps3844@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 5:05:58 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Taylor Dodson
168 Schroyers Ln
Carmichaels, PA 15320-1066

taylordodson35@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 5:27:52 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Nancy Ierardo
5 Mason St
Ste 2
Taunton, MA 02780-4100
[REDACTED]
sprtlgrl216@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 5:27:53 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Gail Stern
90 S Highland Ave
Tarpon Springs, FL 34689-5332
[REDACTED]
gail1muse@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 5:27:53 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Natacha Guillaumin
8 impasse Tastavin
Villa Bianca - Appt 1.3
Toulouse, None 31100
[REDACTED]
n.guillaumin@hotmail.fr

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 5:27:54 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Misty Booth
1250 Palmer Hill Rd
Williamsport, PA 17701-8874
[REDACTED]
booth79ml@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 5:27:54 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Faith Hassan
PO Box 981
Southampton, NY 11969-0981
63187114 faith@nestseekers.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 5:28:21 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. J Wein
PO Box 259
Blacklick, OH 43004-0259

jwein72@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 5:35:31 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not down-list or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection. While their number may appear to be increasing, that doesn't necessarily mean they aren't in need of protection. I would almost guarantee that as soon as protections are removed there could very well be a massive kill of Florida Panthers, if for no other reason but just because they could be legally killed. Having a possible population of MAYBE 200, is a long stretch from having a viable sustainable population and the fact that some of these are of a mixed breed shouldn't enter into the equation even slightly. To introduce another breed into the mix was a decision made by those in Tallahassee, and these animals should not be forced to pay the price for what many now consider to be a less than stellar choice in animal husbandry. It does appear from the numbers that these beautiful animals just might be on the rebound from their almost certain decimation a few short years ago. Please give them every opportunity to allow nature take its course and leave the protections of the Endangered Species Act in place.

Thank you for your time and consideration.

Sincerely,

Mr. Dan Hetland
6403 Julie St
Tampa, FL 33610-3552

d.hetland@tampabay.rr.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 5:35:44 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Carmen Williams
377 NW Stephen Foster Dr
White Springs, FL 32096-7465

flanative02@earthlink.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 5:35:51 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During my lifetime there have already been species lost forever by extinction due to lack of human protection and human negligence. It is crucial to act now and save them. My question to you is what is the positive or "plus" that would come from removing them from the list? I can tell you the negative that will come from removing them: extinction. Are you willing to take that risk?

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Krystal Strotbaum
6812 Bruton Dr
Indianapolis, IN 46256-2304
[REDACTED]
freikrys@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 5:58:29 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Christy Matherne
5240 Quincy St
Metairie, LA 70006-5140
[REDACTED]
tygris724@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 5:58:31 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.
Michelle Romero

Sincerely,

Mrs. Michelle Romero
3589 S Ocean Blvd
Apt 104
Palm Beach, FL 33480-5701
[REDACTED]
cshellsmessage@live.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 5:58:35 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Sam Pugh
3920 Barrymore Ln
Beavercreek, OH 45440-3428
[REDACTED]
hgupmas@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 6:05:30 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Robin Campos
6304 Meadowvista Dr
Carmichael, CA 95608-0975
[REDACTED]
campossmith_07@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 6:05:32 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Deborah Fox
102 Balboa Ct
New Bern, NC 28560-8418
[REDACTED]
rkmommycat@msn.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 6:05:43 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Maria Ljubicic
7
Berazategui, None 1884
0 mlucrecialj@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 6:27:46 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Colleen Wysser - Martin
Mill Road
Norman Park, GA 31771
[REDACTED]
colleenwysser@gmx.ch

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 6:27:57 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Pamela Maxfield
96 Conant St
Danvers, MA 01923-2566
[REDACTED]
pamelamax1@peoplepc.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 6:27:58 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Sharon Johnson
5040 Jackson St Spc 74
North Highlands, CA 95660-5343
[REDACTED]
tigersaregods@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 6:28:00 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Deborah Searles
11112 Brussels Boy Ln
Riverview, FL 33578-6152
[REDACTED]
dulitl2@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 6:28:00 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Christine Whitlow
657 Waverly Rd
Eastlake, OH 44095-2737

christinewhitlow@oh.rr.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 6:28:05 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection. These beautiful animals are more than a mascot! They are impacted by our choices as humans, and we should not only be concerned about that, but try to mitigate the damage. It is the very least we can do. Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Cheryl Frei
2077 Evans Ave
Ventura, CA 93001-3511
[REDACTED]
cherylfreiday@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 6:28:10 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Pauline Cavallaro
920b Garfield St
Franklin Square, NY 11010-2928
[REDACTED]
paulinecav@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 6:28:11 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Tammy Hurst
222 Raintree Rd
Frankfort, KY 40601-4459

tammy_hurst@att.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 6:28:17 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Hannah McGee
16608 Millan De Avila
Tampa, FL 33613-1043

hmhannahbanana@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 6:28:23 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Linda Madeira
1371 N Erin Ave
Upland, CA 91786-2663
[REDACTED]
lindacayan1@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 6:28:26 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.
Kristy Goldstein
08/11/2017

Sincerely,

Mrs. Kristy Goldstein
1637 S Military Trl Lot B8
West Palm Beach, FL 33415-9193
[REDACTED]
goldstein.kristy@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 6:39:21 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. April Vert
2211 NE 67th St
Apt 1101
Fort Lauderdale, FL 33308-1225
[REDACTED]
aprilvert@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 6:39:40 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Andrea Angulo
Pascual Pastorino 545
Buenos Aires, None 1674
[REDACTED]
andrea-angulo@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 6:57:54 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Marilyn Ashbridge
1420 Sheridan St Apt 3h
Hollywood, FL 33020-2217
[REDACTED]
marilynashbridge@live.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 6:58:01 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Mirela Nicolae
22 Windfall Ln
Marlboro, NJ 07746-1681
[REDACTED]
mirela@reghis.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 6:58:13 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Kacie Huson
165 Mona St
Myrtle Creek, OR 97457-9413
[REDACTED]
rasperella@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 7:04:43 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Eileen Snitzer
607 N 31st Ct
Hollywood, FL 33021-6107
[REDACTED]
emesi@bellsouth.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 7:09:45 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Beverly Schwarz
18 Buttonwood Dr
Bordentown, NJ 08505-4818
[REDACTED]
schwarzschwarz3@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 7:09:52 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Rachel Borkowski
226 E 18th St
New York, NY 10003-3653
[REDACTED]
rachel.borkowski1@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 7:09:55 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Julie Gschwend
8446 Dynasty Dr
Boca Raton, FL 33433-6818
[REDACTED]
bocajulz@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 7:09:57 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Sonia Rodriguez
11500 SW 179th Ter
Miami, FL 33157-4972
[REDACTED]
srodr025@fiu.edu

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 7:27:57 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Bette-Burr Fenley
211 Carolina Meadows Villa
Chapel Hill, NC 27517-8500
[REDACTED]
bbfenley3@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 7:28:01 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Tammy Dawson
236 Canada St
Holland, NY 14080-9643

tamskittys@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 7:39:30 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Dennis Wonn
4367 Woodview Dr
Sarasota, FL 34232-2538
[REDACTED]
dew5058@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 7:39:52 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Tristine Williamson
4924 Bolero Ct
Fort Worth, TX 76135-2545
[REDACTED]
blondi4297@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 7:57:55 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. David Cozart
119 S Duncan Ave
Fayetteville, AR 72701-5632
[REDACTED]
fayetteman@att.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 7:57:56 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Stacey Skole
322 E 61st St
Apt 4b
New York, NY 10065-8759
[REDACTED]
sdscole@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 7:57:57 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.
Sincerely,
Cherie Combes
431 B Blanchard Rd
North Augusta, SC 29841

Sincerely,

Ms. Cherie Combes
431b Blanchard Rd
North Augusta, SC 29841-8704
[REDACTED]
alonewolf16@icloud.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 7:58:03 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

Just because progress has been made does not mean the work is over. Panthers are still at a critical level and their numbers would swiftly drop again if protections were removed.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Marin Phillips
1226 N A St
Lake Worth, FL 33460-2041
[REDACTED]
firelizard65@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 7:58:26 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Donna Efan
5989 Kapahi Rd Unit B
Kapaa, HI 96746-2636
[REDACTED]
boxmessage4u@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 7:58:27 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. sue Flood
Valencia Road
lilydale, None 3140
[REDACTED] jamasunshine90@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 8:09:32 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

It is a shame that these incredible looking creatures would even be considered NOT endangered. We "the people" have made our homes on top of their homes. We have selfishly allowed this to happen and not think that we are doing any harm. I am deeply saddened by this. Please do not do this delist them..

Thank You.

Sincerely,

Ms. Jennifer Adamczyk
891 E Hotchkiss Rd
Bay City, MI 48706-9707
[REDACTED]
jensavon1611@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 8:27:52 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Alisa Conley
4661 Virgo Ave
Anchorage, AK 99516-5302
[REDACTED]
alisaconley@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 8:27:57 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. brian girard
978 Green Bay Ct
Ventura, CA 93004-2454
[REDACTED]
briangirard264@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 8:28:02 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Midori Nakayama
241 Alta Vista Dr
South San Francisco, CA 94080-5702
[REDACTED]
midori7412@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 8:28:09 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Cynthia Davis
1425 Heritage Park Rd
Piggott, AR 72454-1918
[REDACTED]
cynrg_00@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 8:28:12 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Randa Law
3272 Strathmore Pl
Eugene, OR 97405-1356
[REDACTED]
lawr@lanecc.edu

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 8:39:34 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Beverly McGreevy
370 Bay Harbour Rd
Mooresville, NC 28117-3507
[REDACTED]
issaquah84@msn.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 8:39:44 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Carol Van Dyke
766 Leonard St NE
Grand Rapids, MI 49503-1158
[REDACTED]
caroltyler1@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 8:39:45 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Michaela Hennessee-Milerski
108 Oak St
Leesville, LA 71446-2277
[REDACTED]
pantar13@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 8:39:49 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Sandra Lail
1408 Twin Creek Rd
Asheboro, NC 27205-1542

sllail@triad.rr.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 8:40:14 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Paula Shalling
1420 Cedarwood Dr
Apt G
Westlake, OH 44145-1870
[REDACTED]
plshalling@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 8:40:19 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Kayla Wallace
945 Texarkana Dr
Indianapolis, IN 46231-2533
[REDACTED]
kgridenour@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 8:58:01 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Kristine Dreyer
3220 Fayette Ave SW
Grandville, MI 49418-1218

krisdreyer@att.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 8:58:02 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Clayton Werley
4072 Pine Hurst Dr
Northampton, PA 18067-9576
[REDACTED]
cmwerley@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 8:58:03 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Panthers are not out of the woods. It makes no sense to try and delist them. Please continue their protection under the Endangered Species Act. Please save this iconic species.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Deborah Bigwood
225 Cohasset St
2
Worcester, MA 01604-2356
[REDACTED]
debtest_01@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 9:09:50 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Lexi Wood
10 Roberts St
Brookline, MA 02445-6716

alexisvwood@icloud.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 9:09:53 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Jeanne Jain
2551 Conway Blvd
Port Charlotte, FL 33952-5606

jeannejain@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 9:09:56 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Lynn Ebeling
140 Van Dyke Rd
Hopewell, NJ 08525-1004
[REDACTED]
lynnebeling@comcast.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 9:17:37 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Jeanette Ortiz
PO Box 515
Sedona, AZ 86339-0515

jeasortiz@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 9:28:04 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Jamie Skinner
205 Glen View Ter
Abingdon, MD 21009-3112
21009 jamie1117@juno.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 9:28:06 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Cara Eichorn
2402 N Lamer St
Burbank, CA 91504-2227

caraeichorn@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 9:28:23 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Bea Young
11017 Peking Pl
Tampa, FL 33624-7027
[REDACTED]
beayoung90@verizon.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 9:39:45 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Ashley Rozanski
488 N Patuxent Rd
Lot 7
Odenton, MD 21113-1574
[REDACTED]
anrozanski86@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 9:39:52 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Mitranee Chatterjee
2 Forest Laneway Apartment 706
North York, ON M2N 5X7
[REDACTED]
kcmc@rogers.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 9:40:02 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Veronica Goode
12171 Shady Springs Ct
Porter Ranch, CA 91326-3823
[REDACTED]
vronicas@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 9:40:16 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Sue Kana
1421 Burton St
Whitestone, NY 11357-2920
[REDACTED]
sotia_703@msn.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 9:40:20 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Sharon DelOrefice
86 Page Ln
Phoenixville, PA 19460-6102
[REDACTED]
s.deloreface@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 9:46:54 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. D Muraco
40 Ware Rd
Needham, MA 02492-1822
[REDACTED]
generg@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 9:58:09 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Lee Ann Morrow
5181 Bigelow Dr
Hilliard, OH 43026-1749
[REDACTED]
leeann02@columbus.rr.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 9:58:24 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Martin Du Plessis
72 Wrentham Rd
Springfield, MA 01119-1833
[REDACTED]
psytrance1968@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 9:58:24 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Lynn Kantor
1246 Kenilworth Pl
Clawson, MI 48017-1021
[REDACTED]
spookyecho2@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 9:58:26 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Inez Hileman
5 Oak Flat Rd
Orinda, CA 94563-1922

imaginez@mac.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 9:58:56 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Kelsey Adams
33 Crestview Ln
Rochester, NH 03839-5674
[REDACTED]
kelseyh725@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 9:58:56 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Emmanuel Ramirez
3037 N Kenmore Ave Apt 2
Chicago, IL 60657-9430

er123@mail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 10:09:51 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Heather Derwin
19630 11 Mile Rd
Big Rapids, MI 49307-9283
[REDACTED]
heatherderwin@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 10:10:00 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Alice Hall
453 Dover Dr S
Englewood, FL 34223-1987
[REDACTED]
bettyboopmoi@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 10:10:04 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Suzanne Dant
6426 Riviera Ct
Mukilteo, WA 98275-5038
[REDACTED]
suzannebdant@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 10:10:05 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Michelle Campbell

Sincerely,

Mrs. michelle campbell
641 Martins Pond Rd
Groton, MA 01450-1426
[REDACTED]
michelle-campbell@tds.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 10:11:19 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Samantha Sloan
397 Lyon st
Carlton, None 46226
[REDACTED]
sloans75@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 10:12:43 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Susan Cuneo
1 Blackfield Dr
102
Tiburon, CA 94920-2053
[REDACTED]
scn331@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 10:28:07 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Joanna Herrington
39 Berwyn Rd
Harriman, NY 10926-3816

joherrington@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 10:28:20 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Alexis Studer
402 Creeping Brook Cir
Dewitt, MI 48820-7102
[REDACTED]
lexie319stdrs@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 10:34:17 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Linda Fields
7579 Thornlee Dr
Lake Worth, FL 33467-7855
[REDACTED]
lindasue561@msn.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 10:39:51 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Madison Brown
933 Beaver Rd
Ambridge, PA 15003-2034

blue.madison.paige.95@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 10:41:36 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

It is important that we remember that there is a delicate balance between all of the animals on our planet and humans. We coexist and need one another for our planet to continue to function in a healthy way. The demise of any of the necessary pieces of this puzzle effects and affects us all. We cannot afford to be so arrogant that we allow our animal population to be decimated--we need each other and must ensure measures are put in place to allow all species to thrive and regain their previous foothold if it has diminished.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Kelly Walker
3860 NE 170th St
Apt 408
North Miami Beach, FL 33160-3105
[REDACTED]
azrael68@comcast.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 10:41:36 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

It is important that we remember that there is a delicate balance between all of the animals on our planet and humans. We coexist and need one another for our planet to continue to function in a healthy way. The demise of any of the necessary pieces of this puzzle effects and affects us all. We cannot afford to be so arrogant that we allow our animal population to be decimated--we need each other and must ensure measures are put in place to allow all species to thrive and regain their previous foothold if it has diminished.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. David Salberg
3860 NE 170th St
Apt 408
North Miami Beach, FL 33160-3105
[REDACTED]
dsalberg@comcast.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 10:45:33 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Victoria Rose
1919 Spencer Rd
Silver Spring, MD 20910-5012

victoriaarose@verizon.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 10:58:23 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. daniel neira
calle de los perros 498
cuenca, NL 94857

w-e-e-d@live.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 10:58:55 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Leslie Carlile
2636 Millbank Dr
Tallahassee, FL 32301-8562

ohspunky1@cs.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 11:09:57 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Anita Mumley
4221 E McDowell Rd Apt 2107
Phoenix, AZ 85008-7443
[REDACTED]
staranita1986@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 11:10:04 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Carolee Tewes
175 Broad St
174
Glens Falls, NY 12801-4119
no
tewescj@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 11:28:14 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Jen Deman
117 E Main St
Lansdale, PA 19446-2573
[REDACTED]
demanjen@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 11:40:06 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Estela Mercado
9526 Natick Ave
North Hills, CA 91343-3428

khansstela@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 11:58:19 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Lauren Hilo
5945 Cloverly Ave
Temple City, CA 91780-2048
[REDACTED]
laurenhilo@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 11:58:23 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

These animals need our protection and deserve to maintain their social. During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Dawn Green
3965 S Silver Bridle Ln
Tucson, AZ 85735-8968
[REDACTED]
forfoxsak@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 12:10:31 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Charles Norris
11 Lake Point Rd
Columbia, SC 29206-4511
[REDACTED]
chmnorris@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 12:10:31 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Linda Gallaher
6005 SW Court
Ocala, FL 34471
[REDACTED]
lg10203040@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 12:28:20 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. JAN PAYNE
312 Max St
Jackson, MI 49203-1033
[REDACTED]
sdpauley@att.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 12:28:23 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Mark Canright
8 Deboer Farm Ln
Asbury, NJ 08802-2106
[REDACTED]
rebeccagroovypeace@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 12:28:24 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Nataliya Yakovleva
2528 14th Ave SW
Largo, FL 33770-4334
[REDACTED]
natashayakovleva2006@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 12:40:08 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Barbara Reith
4435 Richmond Rd
Ringwood, IL 60072-9659
[REDACTED] vancouvergrace1976@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 12:40:10 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Dr. jean tabin
720 W 5200 N
Park City, UT 84098-6004

jndtabin@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 1:04:31 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Melinda Thomas
1715 Hulett Dr
Brandon, FL 33511-2247
[REDACTED]
hthomas09@verizon.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 1:28:25 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Barbara Koppelman
445 E 80th St
Apt 17e
New York, NY 10075-0604
[REDACTED]
barbarakoppelman@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 1:28:26 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Cassandra Batres
6504 W Misty Mountain Way
Tucson, AZ 85757-1508
147258036
kassandrabatres2000@icloud.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 1:28:37 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Dr. Longin Kaczmarzky
114 13th St
St Augustine, FL 32080-6362
[REDACTED]
solonnie@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 1:40:17 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Nataliya Henifin
311 NE 85th St Unit I
Vancouver, WA 98665-5903
[REDACTED]
natka_hen@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 1:58:21 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Eileen Cummings
141 S Hammock Rd
Islamorada, FL 33036-3515
[REDACTED]
e.cummings64@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 2:10:13 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Susan Donaldson
759 Fallen Leaf Ct
Fairfield, CA 94534-4038
[REDACTED]
santipas@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 2:10:13 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Joseph Miller
6451 W. Belle Plaine
Chicago, IL 60634-2489
[REDACTED]
meowthbowler@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 2:10:15 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Bethany Thompson
609 E Lowell St
Lakeland, FL 33805-3039
[REDACTED]
beththompson819@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 2:28:26 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. K. Chippi
PO Box 1794
Nederland, CO 80466-1794

oshalee1969@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 2:28:32 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. manuel moreno
420east 140street apt2
apt2
bronx, NY 10454
[REDACTED]
moreno.manuel96@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 2:28:36 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Carole Simonsen
24723 Jackson St
Kansasville, WI 53139-9766
[REDACTED]
wcsimonsen@sbcglobal.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 2:40:22 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Stephanie Somers
54 Lindsey Dr
Charles Town, WV 25414-5176

jhs_thespian@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 2:47:54 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Anna Borngen
514 E 5th St
New York, NY 10009-6514

anna.borngen@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 3:10:15 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Donald Harris
3220 Langdon Rd
Pueblo, CO 81001-6048
[REDACTED]
literdude2000@comcast.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 3:40:20 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Martin Odstrcil
Smetanova 1293
Napajedla, None 76361
728480964 odstrcilmartin@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 4:10:29 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Astrid Geest
Cairostaat 47
Delft, AR 26222
[REDACTED]
astrid_1962@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 5:28:40 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Holly Carter
10 Coventry Ct Apt D
Presque Isle, ME 04769-3100
[REDACTED]
sweetlyweird@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 5:28:41 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Jenn Hutchings
Coventry Road
Niagara Falls, ON L2H 2X7
[REDACTED]
jhutchings28@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 5:58:42 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,
Lara Sciarretta
via caravaggio 6a
matelica mc 62024
italy

Sincerely,

Mrs. lara sciarretta
via caravaggio, 6a
6a
Matelica, IL 62024
[REDACTED]
lasciarr@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 6:06:07 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Manuel Correa
1100 Date Street
Montara, CA 94037

mannycorrea@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 6:28:45 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Jerome Drossart
2901 N Dale Mabry Hwy Apt 303
Tampa, FL 33607-2459

jeromedrossart@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 6:58:50 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

Please conserve that last little bit of wilderness and the animals who live here. please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection, during the five-year review for this species.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Rob Valli
1900 S Ocean Dr
Fort Lauderdale, FL 33316-3763
[REDACTED]
vallirob@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 6:58:51 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Nigel Harris
1-2 Clarendon Place
Flat 7
Brighton, None BN2 1JD
[REDACTED]
camptit@googlemail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 7:10:38 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Jason Younk
14103 Rochelle St
Apt 8
Detroit, MI 48205-4218
[REDACTED]
jtyounk@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 7:28:50 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Justine Bruhanski
44258 20th St E
Lancaster, CA 93535-5083
[REDACTED]
justeenbruhanski@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 7:29:03 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Linda Akins
PO Box 1027
Altaville, CA 95221-1027
[REDACTED]
l_akins@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 7:46:26 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Nathalie Hartert
1410 Dallas Ave
Nashville, TN 37212-5918
[REDACTED]
ian.hartert@comcast.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 7:58:52 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Brad Henry
5109 S Jamaica Dr
Muncie, IN 47302-9117

bjhenry1776@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 7:58:52 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Marcela Rubio
2025 NE 164th St
Apt 916
North Miami Beach, FL 33162-4162
[REDACTED]
rubiochela@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 8:10:51 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Lacy Comstock
1022 Pineway St
Ludington, MI 49431-1973
[REDACTED]
comstocklacy@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 8:28:54 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

It is up to ALL of us to protect those who can not protect themselves!!

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Ellen Woodward
49 Orange Rd
Canaan, NH 03741-7321
[REDACTED]
dragonkitty66@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 8:40:59 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Kris Dotson
515 N Indiana St
Elmhurst, IL 60126-2040
[REDACTED]
jimsplacecats@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 8:41:04 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Adam Vogel
7531 Northern Oak
Brownsburg, IN 46112-9143
[REDACTED]
acv520@mac.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 8:49:13 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. victoria nolan
1526 N Thompson Dr
Bay Shore, NY 11706-1334
[REDACTED]
beyond_beautyxox@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 8:59:05 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Alma Hachey
962 Signal Ct
Concord, CA 94518-3364
[REDACTED]
alma94530@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 9:10:57 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Stacy Hopkins
7767 Oakmont Dr
Lake Worth, FL 33467-1219
[REDACTED]
stacyhopkins2319@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 9:28:57 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Jane Walton
46 Mornington Court
Fall River, NS B2T 1X4
[REDACTED]
jainandcharles@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 9:28:59 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Victoria Stevenson
PO Box 272883
Boca Raton, FL 33427-2883
[REDACTED]
vzorilla@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 9:40:53 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Michael Henn
805 Northampton Rd
Kalamazoo, MI 49006-2717
[REDACTED]
mikhael.h808@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 9:40:55 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Hilda Martinez
4830 S Hermitage Ave
Chicago, IL 60609-4156
[REDACTED]
mague1117@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 9:41:01 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Pamela Crouse
1928 Brynmawr Ave
Haddon Heights, NJ 08035-1013
[REDACTED]
pechaas@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 9:49:13 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Tony Chiera
189 Oakcrest Ln
Aiken, SC 29803-5018
[REDACTED]
kmchiera@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 9:59:05 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Mark Ridder
15300 E Windham Ct
Wichita, KS 67230-6907

mk3160@sbcglobal.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 9:59:05 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Margaret Hassett
2306 Fuller St
Philadelphia, PA 19152-2908
[REDACTED]
hassettm@mac.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 9:59:10 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Mariana Heymans
2 Saxenburg Crescent STRAND
CAPE TOWN, NY 12345
[REDACTED]
wildlife005@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 9:59:11 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Lisa Stone
3729 W 77th Pl
Merrillville, IN 46410-5031
[REDACTED]
rollingstone21@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 9:59:14 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Dr. Amanda Schultes
1005 Roland Dr
Papillion, NE 68046-6166
[REDACTED]
amanda.scholtes81@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 9:59:15 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Dr. sean smith
711 W End Ave
New York, NY 10025-6821
[REDACTED]
ssmithbasscomp@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 10:10:57 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Sulema Hammett
22 E 112th St
New York, NY 10029-2653
[REDACTED]
sulema1228@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 10:11:03 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss marie hanulak
3865 Rue Pare
Saint-Hubert, QC J3Y 4S4
[REDACTED]
anulak41@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 10:11:07 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. L Hurchalla
3555 Trout Gulch Rd
Aptos, CA 95003-2611

cawingnut19@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 10:11:07 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Anamaria Arboleda
1047 Memorial Village Dr
Houston, TX 77024-4454

anamaria.arboleda@sbcglobal.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 10:29:02 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Dr. Tracy Karrer
4375 Raleigh Ave Apt 204
Alexandria, VA 22304-5357
[REDACTED]
boredblabble@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 10:29:12 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. M Feldman
Private
Fort Lauderdale, FL 33322
[REDACTED]
mad4life@comcast.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 10:29:18 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. michelle crockford
siggiewi
siggiewi
siggiewi, None sgw3202
356 michelcrockford@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 10:41:00 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Kristy Doades
4196 Waterway Dr
Montclair, VA 22025-1603

kristyjd@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 10:41:04 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Tashira Morales
HC 645 Box 5126
Trujillo Alto, P.R 00976
Trujillo Alto, PR 00976-9758
[REDACTED]
tashiiraa.m@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 10:41:05 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. E.D. Crum
Whitmore Lane (voting--expat)
Stamford, CT 06902

e_crum@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 10:59:09 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Jeff Price
140 Seymour St
Sharon, WI 53585-9642
[REDACTED]
pricelessongs@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 11:11:06 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Lisa Jack
1717 Novato Blvd Apt 3
Novato, CA 94947-3043
[REDACTED]
lrjzut@comcast.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 11:29:05 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Giovanna Motta
Via Mazzini 59
Gambolò, NC 27025
00390381091732
giovanna_motta@hotmail.it

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 11:29:05 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Riva Patel
127 Grove St
Roselle Park, NJ 07204-1407

rivapatel2897@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 11:29:06 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Jeanette Guckenberger
37 Cedar Valley Rd
New Park, PA 17352-9413

chem@zoominternet.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 11:29:08 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Ginger Epperson
3216 Marlanta Dr
Marietta, GA 30062-5040
[REDACTED]
b4ui81too@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 11:29:13 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Monica Smilko
8254 Moncrief Dinsmore Rd
Jacksonville, FL 32219-3606
[REDACTED]
mohicuss@msn.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 11:41:29 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Mark Pucci
2430 Wellington Green Dr
Wellington, FL 33414-9319
[REDACTED]
markpucci@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 11:41:34 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Laura Lee
338 E 5th St
Apt 10
New York, NY 10003-8871
[REDACTED]
electricmotormaint@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 12:06:31 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Dave Moes
472 Brookside Pl
Cranford, NJ 07016-1648
[REDACTED]
david.moze@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 12:11:09 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Linda Eby
7516 Noah Reid Rd
Chattanooga, TN 37416-3526
[REDACTED]
lindarae1926@comcast.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 12:29:16 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Ian Cunningham
445 Wind Gust
New Braunfels, TX 78130-2494
[REDACTED]
grrlsrmean@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 12:29:20 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Niki Papageorgiou
3405 Half Mile Post N
Garnet Valley, PA 19060-1033
[REDACTED]
np.realty22@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 12:29:23 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Tania Rivera
4622 London Dr
Indianapolis, IN 46254-2130
[REDACTED]
tania365@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 12:29:27 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Cheryl Lyons
6063 Deering St
Garden City, MI 48135-2508
[REDACTED]
tugboatcl@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 12:41:07 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Gaby Cabrera
10383 SW 142nd St
Miami, FL 33176-7042

gab.cab@outlook.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 12:41:37 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Barry Frederick Baudains
Vincent Court
Albert Street
St Helier Jersey, None JE23TD
[REDACTED]
barryfbaudains@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 12:59:23 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Tiffany Blenis
11187 Ivy Dr
Arlington, TN 38002-4151

tiffanyblenis@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 12:59:25 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Dobrinka Valli
2692 NE 59 str
Fort Lauderdale, FL 33308
[REDACTED]
dobrinka.peteova@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 12:59:32 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Jamie Butler
3910 Pointe Decatur St
North Las Vegas, NV 89032-2886
[REDACTED]
jaymee10377@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 12:59:46 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Vicki Bunchuk
546 Zinn Dr
Southampton, PA 18966-3644
[REDACTED]
lofcot@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 1:11:17 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Wesley Merritt
1355 Walker Ave NW Rm 1
Grand Rapids, MI 49504-4011
[REDACTED]
psyhot69@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 1:11:18 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Joel Palmer
240 Lake Dr S
Algonquin, IL 60102-1737

jspalmer34@comcast.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 1:11:18 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Victoria Wu
676 E Mission St
San Jose, CA 95112-1516

thevicwu@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 1:29:21 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Helen Tsigas
Agias Lavras 68
Zografou, None 15773
+302107715671 elenitsiga@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 1:41:20 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Marina Boubion
PO Box 2460
Escondido, CA 92033-2460
[REDACTED] planktonbou@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 1:59:22 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Sara Seitz
2533 Newton St
Akron, OH 44305-3933
[REDACTED]
slseitz@neo.rr.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 1:59:26 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Allyson Orosco
954 E Union St
Seattle, WA 98122-4289

aorosco000@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 2:11:15 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Angela Morgan
6151 Snowden Dr
Ferndale, WA 98248-9349

angmorgan@msn.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 2:11:19 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. monty foley
1041 Big Four Rd
Warren, PA 16365-5340

tukktaway@webtv.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 2:11:19 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Robin Ehlert
706 1/2 E Thomas St
Wausau, WI 54403-6445

robinaehlert@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 2:11:23 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Trisha Petro
33RICHMOND St
Islip, NY 11751
[REDACTED]
beachgirl5@optonline.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 2:29:19 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. sarah gingell littlejohn
Gharghur
Gharghur, FL 11111
11111111 elg1977@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 2:29:25 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Jennifer Ramberg
151 Ely Pl
Palo Alto, CA 94306-4553

jramberg@sbcglobal.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 2:29:28 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Aldana Santto-Quinnell
650 W 204th St Apt 51
New York, NY 10034-3960
[REDACTED]
aldana_santto@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 2:41:19 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Kay Grenfell
549 Elizabeth St
Kingsford, MI 49802-5619
[REDACTED]
kayslee@chartermi.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 2:41:20 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Chris Jasinski
112 W 300 N
Kanab, UT 84741-3242

chrisjasinski9@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 2:41:24 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Ray Leppla
2011 Arbor Dr
Clearwater, FL 33760-1932

rayl_964@msn.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 2:41:25 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Dianne Urquhart
6058 Crawford St
San Diego, CA 92120-4103
[REDACTED]
dianneurquhart@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 2:59:22 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Chelsi M
467 Mount Willie Rd
Junction City, AR 71749-9030
[REDACTED]
sweetpc_chick_13@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 2:59:28 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. JEAN E & WILLIAM C HAYES
6689 Forest Park Dr
Deforest, WI 53532-2743
[REDACTED]
whayes002@charter.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 3:11:43 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Evelyn Huzenis
5213 W Berteau Ave
Chicago, IL 60641-1444

ehuzenis@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 3:12:08 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Sandra Hutchinson
PO Box 295
Port Leyden, NY 13433-0295
[REDACTED]
sjhutch1@frontiernet.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 3:29:23 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. donye Sacco
1230 E 66th St
Los Angeles, CA 90001-1623
[REDACTED]
donyedonye@yahoo.it

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 3:41:25 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Hillary Koogler
14 Pomeroy St
Allston, MA 02134-1914
[REDACTED]
hbgreatwhite@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 3:48:05 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Madison Butler
5611 Community Center Dr
Gibsonia, PA 15044-9545

m.butler1357@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 3:59:23 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Dita Holcmannova
Na Vysluni 1242
Chrudim, WI 53705
[REDACTED]
dholcmannova@seznam.cz

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 4:11:28 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Dr. Lee Hamilton
213 E Jay Ave
McAllen, TX 78504-2044
[REDACTED]
lthamilton@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 4:11:34 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you,

Tina Reid

Sincerely,

Ms. Tina Reid
2870 Benton Ridge Rd
Palmyra, TN 37142-2215
[REDACTED]
tinareid38@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 4:19:23 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Jacob McGuire
3105 24th St
Boulder, CO 80304-2805
[REDACTED]
mr.jacobmcguire@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 4:29:28 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Kelly Hamilton
17 Oak St
Apt 2
Somerville, MA 02143-4014
[REDACTED]
kellye1357@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 4:29:29 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Elisabetta Medas
Sandakerveien 20 D
Oslo, None 0473
47143836 elizabethmed@libero.it

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 4:41:34 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Matt Michaelis
1770 17th Ave
Santa Cruz, CA 95062-1850

tofucoyote@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 4:41:34 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Janice Knestrick
1409 Mount Vernon St
Orlando, FL 32803-5419
[REDACTED]
kookyweeb@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 4:59:28 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Brad Hobberstad
1082 W Sirringo Way
Riverton, UT 84065-4161
[REDACTED]
bradhobberstad@comcast.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 4:59:29 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Dr. Barbara Matusik
6159 SE 85th Loop # B
Trenton, FL 32693-1959

bm7213@ufl.edu

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 4:59:30 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Michael Biswas
100 Western Battery Rd
Toronto, ON M6K 3S2

biswas.007@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 4:59:39 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Dr. Georgia Griffin
52825 Fairchild Rd
Chesterfield, MI 48051-1950

georgiagriffindo@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 5:04:58 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Gail Farmer
3131 Wyandotte Cir Apt B
Kansas City, KS 66106-2867
[REDACTED]
gaillfarmer416@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 5:11:39 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Michele Van Zeeland
12244 Burbank Blvd
Valley Village, CA 91607-5101
[REDACTED]
michelevanzeeland@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 5:11:42 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Jamie Yates
1 Melrob Ct
Apt 1
Annapolis, MD 21403-7485
[REDACTED]
kanshiwa@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 5:29:38 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. S Bee
83 Stephen Dr
Brockton, MA 02302-1139
[REDACTED]
kittykats13@comcast.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 5:29:43 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Hilda Gilman
11455 SW 109th Rd Apt C
Miami, FL 33176-3160
[REDACTED]
psychdiver@att.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 5:41:31 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. S Murphy
Hillside
Berks, None S112rw

kwangmurphy1980@hotmail.co.uk

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 5:41:41 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. A. T. street
denver, CO 80223

ashesthorensen@orange.fr

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 5:41:41 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Joseph Webster
4015 Graces Ln
Decatur, IL 62521-8651
[REDACTED]
joewebster81@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 5:41:46 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Susan Sacirbey
408 Aronovitz Ln
Key West, FL 33040-6525
██████████
belikemo@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 5:59:42 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Elena Nikolova
Drujba-2
Sofia, None 3591582

marilynmanson13@abv.bg

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 6:11:47 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. J.C. van der Lee
Jagerspad 10
Veenendaal, None 3902JH
0031640730186 jcvanderlee@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 6:29:40 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. sergio Canedo
Rosas
Espanita
Irapuato, AL 36610

sergiocanedo2000@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 6:29:42 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Elizabeth Martino
7 Waterfront Ct
Ormond Beach, FL 32174-3856

ecatmartino@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 6:29:50 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. William Dudak
2962 SW Sunset Trace Cir
Palm City, FL 34990-2627
[REDACTED]
jagger772@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 6:41:40 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Susan McGuire
42021 Purplebush Ave
Lancaster, CA 93536-1219

slmcg54@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 6:41:40 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Michael Sawyer
2854 Westwood Ln
Carmichael, CA 95608-4122
[REDACTED]
mykeynorman@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 6:41:41 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Amy Wolfberg
1817 N Fuller Ave
Los Angeles, CA 90046-2355
[REDACTED]
amyd1968@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 6:41:42 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Cathy Marczyk
15 Tiros Ave
Highland Mills, NY 10930-2637
[REDACTED]
roncat1@optonline.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 6:41:47 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Wesley Sisson
5343 Splitrail Dr
Hermantown, MN 55811-3675
[REDACTED]
wesleysisson98@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 7:11:44 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Allison Porcella
5520 N Haverhill Rd Apt 11
West Palm Bch, FL 33407-3000
[REDACTED]
buster27panther@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 7:11:49 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Jari Mattila
45 Pondfield Rd W
Apt 6f
Bronxville, NY 10708-2685
[REDACTED]
devonsoles@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 7:11:55 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Randall Parker
241 Palm Ave
Millbrae, CA 94030-2442
[REDACTED]
flutefelder@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 7:29:47 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Stephanie Hill
45728 Pebble Crk W Apt 7
Shelby Township, MI 48317-4883
[REDACTED]
sjhill0510@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 7:41:46 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Ann Lastra
4402 Kendall Way
Roswell, GA 30075-8253

sannu@charter.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 7:49:02 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Adele Garvin
PO Box 160
Union, NH 03887-0160

adelegarvin@earthlink.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 7:59:57 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Diana F. Chan
12840 Normandy Ln
Los Altos Hills, CA 94022-4650
[REDACTED]
easyandhealthycooking@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 7:59:58 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Christina Aragon
22093 W Solano Dr
Buckeye, AZ 85326-5931
[REDACTED]
caragon222@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 8:00:03 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Cindy Dutka
6547 Haverford Ave Apt 4
Philadelphia, PA 19151-3740
[REDACTED]
mdmsass@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 8:29:55 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Sarah Hultgreen
478 Lakepark Trl
Oviedo, FL 32765-8274

sarahcolleen@ymail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 8:29:55 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Dr. Linda Vickerman
2812 Morningside Ter
Escondido, CA 92029-6601

linvick@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 8:30:06 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Sandra Martin
18566 Willowridge Ln
Clinton Township, MI 48038-5259
NA
sandyjomi18@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 8:42:00 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Ferne Clements
3660 W Park Rd
Cleveland, OH 44111-5719

ferneellen@sbcglobal.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 8:59:54 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Sharon Hesse
420 Fremont Ct
Berryville, VA 22611-1441
[REDACTED]
ladyhawke138@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 9:00:38 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Sharon Malo
10149 45th Ter S
Boynton Beach, FL 33436-4256
[REDACTED]
malo75@att.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 9:00:38 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Claudia Gomes
Rua Cosme Velho
Rio de Janeiro, None 22241090
+5521986308265 clausaigom@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 9:00:41 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Susan Sandridge
125 Church St
Ware, MA 01082-1219
[REDACTED]
chocolateisgood125@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 9:11:59 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Genevieve Miller
2772 Knollside Ln
Vienna, VA 22180-7083

genevieve.jeanette.miller@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 9:29:54 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Martha Rogers
4205 NE 139th Ln
Anthony, FL 32617-2332
[REDACTED]
rogersmle2@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 9:29:59 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. JOHANNA JACKSON
977 W Tennyson Rd Apt 106
Hayward, CA 94544-5141
[REDACTED]
johjacjoh@comcast.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 9:59:58 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. kathryn altamore
39 Glendower Rd
Roslindale, MA 02131-4552
[REDACTED]
kataqua@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 10:30:02 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Barbara Langan
13051 Greenwood Rd
Huntingdon, PA 16652-6029

barbaralangan@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 10:30:03 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Jessica Contreras
3801 NW 84th Ave
Coral Springs, FL 33065-2917

jessica.contreras.03@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 10:30:03 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Lois Upham
45 Cory Ct
Covington, GA 30016-3340

lnupham@earthlink.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 10:37:02 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Mariko Kaonohi
3716-214th Street
Matteson, IL 60443-2555
[REDACTED]
mariko_kaonohi@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 11:00:11 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Michelle Hoffman
925 N Main St Apt 15
Mitchell, SD 57301-1958
[REDACTED]
michellehoffman64@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 11:00:14 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Larry Bosket
197 Long Creek Rd
Apalachin, NY 13732-2103
[REDACTED]
bosketl@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 11:00:27 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Dondi Nueva
PO Box 4113
Kailua Kona, HI 96745-4113
[REDACTED]
dsquaredincl@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 11:12:16 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Nancy Chao
2203 Concordia Dr
Columbia, MO 65203-1309
[REDACTED]
fanc632_n@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 11:12:24 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Kathy Moseley
3576 W Lyndale St
Chicago, IL 60647-3532

im.semibold@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 11:30:05 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection. Preservation of these iconic animals is a must--as they are part of the ecosystem and must be protected.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Mary Kay Elloian, Esq.
1500 District Ave
Burlington, MA 01803-5069
[REDACTED]
mke@thelegaledition.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 11:37:04 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Sylvia Yetsook
1751 SE 155th St
Summerfield, FL 34491-3878
[REDACTED]
syetsook7@msn.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 11:42:12 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Nora Davidson
2956 Delphi Ct NE
Bremerton, WA 98311-9572
[REDACTED]
tigers@islandnet.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 11:42:13 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Johanna Held
400 Breckenridge Ln
Louisville, KY 40207-3829

joyheld@mac.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 11:42:14 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Iryna Kosel
7474 Shawnee Run Rd
Cincinnati, OH 45243-3013
[REDACTED]
irynakosel@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 12, 2017 11:42:18 PM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Dana Zupanovich
314 Dave Dr
San Pedro, CA 90732-3135
[REDACTED]
danazup@att.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 12:00:13 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Soria Adibi
1710 Foster Dr
Arlington, TX 76012-2322
[REDACTED]
sadibi89@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 12:12:17 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Nili Dutton
106 Cavallini Dr
Nokomis, FL 34275-1423
[REDACTED]
tnac10@ymail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 12:30:09 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Debra Kitchin
4115 Christopher Ct
Winnemucca, NV 89445-6011

gone2dogs@att.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 12:30:14 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Angela Terranova
2793 Queen City Ave Apt 4
Cincinnati, OH 45238-2697

backtoavalon7@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 12:30:19 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Hello I was born in Miami, Florida. Raised all of my Life there. I grew up in the Everglades with my parents belonging to the Everglades Conservation Club on the Loop Road off of Tamiami Trail. I grew up learning everything about the Everglades and Wildlife Club. We had fundraising event which was called The Wild hog BBQ. We had at least a hundred thousand people out there for years while I was growing up I was born in the 1960s. I learned a lot of information on how to respect wildlife, not to kill something unless you're eating it. I learned to be able to survive in the Everglades. I started going there when I was about 1 years old. But I do remember seeing when we were out at camp in the middle of the Everglades the Florida panther and I was lucky enough to be able to see one. So please keep them protected so they will keep reproducing so even my children and grandchildren will be able to see them. Hopefully my great-grandchildren. My email address is barryjanine985@yahoo.com if you would like to contact me. Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Janine Barry
600 Hickory St
Melbourne, FL 32901-1420

barryjanine985@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 12:42:39 AM

Aug 12, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Phil Nona
2019 N Main St
Royal Oak, MI 48073-4172

philnona79@att.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 1:00:20 AM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Theresa Rice
326 Royal Liverpool Ln
Orlando, FL 32828-8019
[REDACTED]
rice2626@bellsouth.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 1:00:26 AM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Melinda Alpaugh
1106 Ski Run Blvd
South Lake Tahoe, CA 96150-8797

a134mom@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 1:00:32 AM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Mabel R
5015 Twilight Canyon Rd
36g
Yorba Linda, CA 92887-3957
[REDACTED]
mabel_ra@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 1:12:27 AM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. K M
1360 Pocahontas Ave
Pahrump, NV 89048-3948
[REDACTED]
ke7gge@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 1:30:14 AM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Samuel Wong
1807 Berglund Dr
West Covina, CA 91792-1008
[REDACTED]
samtheveggie@msn.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 1:30:17 AM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Caitlin Bell
4955 Dead End Rd
Rhineland, WI 54501-8996
[REDACTED]
bell_catie@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 1:42:26 AM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Kat Bowley
515 E Crossville Rd
Roswell, GA 30075-3087
[REDACTED]
katbowley108@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 2:12:28 AM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Dr. Holly Mannino
PO Box 8254
Newport Beach, CA 92658-8254

imgold@me.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 2:30:23 AM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Nadia Foskolou
122 W 137th St Apt 2b
New York, NY 10030-2523
[REDACTED]
nadia.foskolou@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 3:00:25 AM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Elaine Greenwood
163 Aspen Loop
Aledo, TX 76008-4530
[REDACTED]
e_taylorgreenwood@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 3:30:29 AM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Ann Palmer
203 Jewell Ave
Smyrna, TN 37167-4172

asmpalmer@att.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 4:07:56 AM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Arlene Forward
8 Hampton Hill Ct
Huntington, NY 11743-5725

aforward@optonline.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 4:30:32 AM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Mandy Walker
5161 Highway 472
Hazlehurst, MS 39083-9662
[REDACTED]
avaarlene2011@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 4:30:36 AM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. JESSICA MARIA DOLOR
14616 Holly Ave
Flushing, NY 11355-2247
[REDACTED]
ugolin92@nyc.rr.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 5:12:52 AM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Sarah McDonald
1186 8th Fairway Ln
Huddleston, VA 24104-3550
[REDACTED]
sarahroanoke13@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 5:30:44 AM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Grace S
14 joe farrington road nassau, FL 33069 4434
[REDACTED]
maria_lamaha@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 5:30:45 AM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Dr. Laura Maschio
via Rivarano, 12/A
Monteforte Irpino, 83024
[REDACTED]
lmaie.65@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 7:13:22 AM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Núria Bassas
Carrer de la Indústria
Barcelona, NJ 08025
654806145
nbassas@ono.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 7:13:23 AM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Cheryl Hanson
14160 London St NE
Ham Lake, MN 55304-4571
[REDACTED]
ckhanson824@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 7:13:54 AM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Jessica Guzlas
1619 S California Ave
Chicago, IL 60608-1709

guzlas@sbcglobal.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 7:30:53 AM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Robin Stephens
126 Crissman Ln
Templeton, PA 16259-1302
[REDACTED]
spud1@windstream.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 7:30:55 AM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Michelle Robinson
Leopold Road
Ramsgate
Kent, FL 67435

michellerobinson76@sky.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 8:01:24 AM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Derek Raiskums
234 Commerce St
Hawthorne, NY 10532-2039
[REDACTED]
hd_rd_queen@msn.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 8:13:09 AM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Patricia Aguilera
15621 SW 109th Ter
Miami, FL 33196-3555

pagui007@fiu.edu

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 8:13:10 AM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Gail Patak
13770 Devan Lee Dr N
Jacksonville, FL 32226-5059
[REDACTED]
gepatak@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 8:31:02 AM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Kathleen Grubbs
900 N Curry Pike
Bloomington, IN 47404-2541
[REDACTED]
symba07@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 8:31:03 AM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Ellen Boyle
PO Box 963
North Chatham, NY 12132-0963
[REDACTED]
ellen.boyle@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 8:31:05 AM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Nanette Kripke
310 E 24th St Apt 6j
New York, NY 10010-4037
[REDACTED]
nkripke@gmsil.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 9:01:19 AM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. D. Fairburn
Veterans Drive SW
Lakewood, WA 98498
[REDACTED]
dfairburn26@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 9:09:57 AM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Teresa Larsen
4437 Woolworth Ave
Omaha, NE 68105-1756

teresalarsen20@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 9:13:14 AM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Theresa Freeman
313 Wheeler Ave
Smyrna, TN 37167-4771

sentra57@att.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 9:31:10 AM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Elisabet Peterzen
bbv 30
osmo, None 14832

elisabet.peterzen@spray.se

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 9:31:11 AM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Leigha Henson
730 S 8th St
Griffin, GA 30224-4827
[REDACTED]
leighamh89@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 9:31:16 AM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

Please help! During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Nancy Cucurello
1 Globeflower Ln
West Windsor, NJ 08550-2427
[REDACTED]
ncucurello@comcast.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 9:43:13 AM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Trish Knull
1934 Lacomie St
Williamsport, PA 17701-1546
[REDACTED]
trishknull@me.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 9:43:13 AM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Janet Bovitz-Sandefur
71 Hallmark Rd
Rochester, NY 14625-1346

jbovitzsandefur@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 9:43:17 AM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Julie Schmidt
1158 Snow Dr
Elburn, IL 60119-9170
[REDACTED]
blvinf8@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 10:01:12 AM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Barbara Garris
Lange Zeile 35
Nürnberg, None 90419
[REDACTED]
barbara.garris@web.de

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 10:01:19 AM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Sophie Bertazzo
1127 Buchanan St NW
Washington, DC 20011-4428
[REDACTED]
sophie.a.latham@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 10:01:26 AM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Trisha Thomas
3334 Arundel On The Bay Rd
Annapolis, MD 21403-4735
[REDACTED]
tsthomas00@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 10:13:18 AM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Vicki Mattison
4820 Walton Ave
Titusville, FL 32780-6820
[REDACTED]
mcountryv@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 10:43:22 AM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Luann Otzelberger
39087 Schlies Rd
High Bridge, WI 54846-6436
[REDACTED]
luannotzi@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 11:01:42 AM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

Dear Mr. Shindle,

During the five-year review for this species, I urge you to please not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you,
Barbara Kinsey
1628 Manor Drive
Cocoa, FL 32922

Sincerely,

Ms. Barbara Kinsey
1628 Manor Dr
Cocoa, FL 32922-6922
[REDACTED]
bsgouraki@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 11:13:24 AM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Valerie Travisano
127 B East Pt Pleasant Ave
Ocean Gate, NJ 08740
[REDACTED]
xdoodle12@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 11:31:28 AM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Meagan Ritter
8136 NE 98th St
Kansas City, MO 64157-7780
[REDACTED]
mms3019@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 12:01:28 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Jamie Pfister
7215 Via Carmela
San Jose, CA 95139-1127
[REDACTED]
yourteam2@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 12:13:35 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Andrea Torres
15505 Nordhoff St
North Hills, CA 91343-3249
[REDACTED]
drea618@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 12:13:37 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. kathleen leblanc
42 Polaski Ave
Chicopee, MA 01013-1028
[REDACTED]
catsdeflepligr1@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 12:31:33 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Lorraine Dumas
2681 Trailwood Ln
Lexington, KY 40511-8841

spanishlo@twc.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 12:43:40 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Bijan Foroutan
3713 Old Pfafftown Rd
Winston Salem, NC 27106-2546

bforoutan@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 12:43:41 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Nicole Haraczka
636 Longwood Rd
Collegeville, PA 19426-3534
[REDACTED]
haracnic@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 12:43:45 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, PLEASE do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. A. Kostreva
150 W Maple St
Chicago, IL 60610-5433

akostreva@att.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 12:43:47 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Fabrice Le Boedec
190 Av Willowdale
Outremont, QC H3T 1G2
[REDACTED]
f_le_boedec009@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 1:02:00 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Kimberly Hart
123 Robin Dr
Advance, NC 27006-7918
[REDACTED]
kimberlyrhart1@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 1:13:49 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Brett McCain
2504 CC Rd
Arkadelphia, AR 71923-2989
[REDACTED]
bm150986@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 1:13:50 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection. Please continue to keep the panthers protected.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Jiun Lam
46 Poole Road
Singapore, None 437534
[REDACTED]
delfi76@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 1:13:51 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Sabine Gondermann-Manea
Eichfeld
5
Mühldorf am Inn, None 84453
[REDACTED]
sagoma61@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 1:13:55 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Charlotte Franklin
PO Box 180995
Fort Smith, AR 72918-0995
[REDACTED]
misspiggy105@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 1:21:28 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Dr. Anthony Bolten
615 Palmer Ave
Hazlet Township, NJ 07734-3278
[REDACTED]
between_us_2@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 1:31:32 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Any thought of hunting or harassing these animals is absolutely wrong.

Sincerely,

Mr. James & Voigt
9385 Brady St
Spring Hill, FL 34608-4719
[REDACTED]
jvoigt@tampabay.rr.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 1:31:33 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Cynthia Sanatass
530 Hilda St
11
East Meadow, NY 11554-4341
[REDACTED]
cass611@ymail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 1:31:38 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Gilberto Mello
6851 Sunny Cv
Los Angeles, CA 90068-2016
[REDACTED]
versla2@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 2:02:02 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Nikki Fournier
85 Baptist Common Rd
Templeton, MA 01468-1494
[REDACTED]
srvivor8369@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 2:02:05 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Kathy Brown
1844 Strawberry Ridge Dr
Ballwin, MO 63021-7773

kbmb4422@charter.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 2:14:51 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Peggy Drake
751 Central Ave
Holland, MI 49423-5139

jinni0611@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 2:43:51 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Melanie Kircher
Lähderanta 22 H 13
Espoo, MA 02720
+358405502997 melkircher@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 2:43:53 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. jacklyn alford
11703 N Oaks Dr
Austin, TX 78753-2308

jacklynalford@att.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 3:01:41 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. arnold wiseman
153 N Feather Ct
Pagosa Springs, CO 81147-7614
[REDACTED]
dragonmaster9@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 3:01:42 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Angelique Castro
410 Carr 876 Apt 79
Trujillo Alto, PR 00976-7304
[REDACTED]
angelistar2002@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 3:01:43 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Christy Carden
2850 Wynterhall Rd SE
Huntsville, AL 35803-2285

cc0036@uah.edu

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 3:01:44 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Sarah fondeur
8619th
109st
Richmond Hill, NY 11418
347230035 sarahfondeur65@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 3:01:47 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Nancy Wiemer
227 S Clinton Ave
Bradley, IL 60915-2403

nancyw67@sbcglobal.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 3:01:48 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. s b
royal birkdale
tarpon springs, FL 34689
727 -945-i873
alexonecat@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 3:01:50 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Patrizia Menta
Via Colombare 6
Cremona, IA 26049

patriziamenta@yahoo.it

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 3:01:50 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Susan Allman
1001 Sherbrooke Rd
Saint Charles, MO 63303-4026

suzori@sbcglobal.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 3:31:39 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Yolanda Bernhard
Tulpenstrasse 2
Zürich, NJ 08051
[REDACTED]
y.bernhard@bluewin.ch

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 3:31:46 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. David Bailey
5775 38th Pl
Vero Beach, FL 32966-1809
[REDACTED]
dbgator311@ail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 3:38:56 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Paula Oh
324 Washington St
Glenview, IL 60025-5030
[REDACTED]
poh77@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 3:44:02 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Rich C
3440 11th Ave W
Seattle, WA 98119-1406

oneime69@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 3:44:02 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection. They are an amazing animal and should be preserved for our descendants.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Mary Harris
8009 Goodman Dr
Urbandale, IA 50322-7318
[REDACTED]
marbhar@q.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 3:44:20 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Beverly McIllwain
5413 Breakwater Dr
Granite Falls, NC 28630-8807
[REDACTED]
wachemom@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 3:44:22 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Patrice Marsille-Franey
Calle Pisagua # 199
Casilla n°182, Traiguén
Traiguén - Región de La Araucanía, None 4730000
[REDACTED]
pm.chile1@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 4:01:51 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Mickey Lester
PO Box 81
Thomaston, GA 30286-0002

miclest@windstream.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 4:14:03 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Victor Chirel
347 Newbridge Rd
Unit B
East Meadow, NY 11554-4144
[REDACTED]
infinite@optonline.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 4:14:08 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Ibn-Umar Abbasparker
11 John St
Sayreville, NJ 08872-1523
[REDACTED]
mubarak0512@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 4:14:08 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Megan Miceli
9517 Gulf Shore Dr
Naples, FL 34108-2005

meganlmiceli@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 4:31:50 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Jean Washburn
843 Fair Port Cir
Glen Allen, VA 23060-7263
[REDACTED]
jeanwash843@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 4:44:00 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Barbara Bose
419 Willow Vista Dr
El Lago, TX 77586-6019
[REDACTED]
barbbobbose@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 5:14:10 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Jennifer Walkowiak
51 Richland Ct
Saint Charles, MO 63304-1200
[REDACTED]
jwalkowiak@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 5:31:58 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Laura Mallory
828 N Chicago Ave
Arlington Heights, IL 60005-1005
[REDACTED]
scoobysnacks4@att.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 5:31:58 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

I know full well that the wildlife biologists at the FWS are very aware of the need to keep the panther listed. Please don't give into political pressure. If the mortality rate is increasing due to auto collisions, then something needs to be done about maintaining habitat connectivity. If the Florida panther is a keystone species, then the entire ecosystem will be in jeopardy. We are already on a slippery slope with climate change, let's not make it worse.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Karen Ogle
8138 E Hinsdale Dr
Centennial, CO 80112-1906
[REDACTED]
karenogle4444@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 5:44:04 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Stephen Penberthy
PO Box 63
Yandina, None 4561

sh.penberthy@bigpond.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 5:44:04 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Samantha Hughes
2415 Hayes St
Hollywood, FL 33020-3415
[REDACTED]
samtoft27@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 6:01:59 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Mary Cannon
1677 Oak Ave
Buena Vista, VA 24416-2427
[REDACTED]
christseekermlh@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 6:01:59 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Maria Staeblein
70 W California Ave
Columbus, OH 43202-1911
[REDACTED]
mariastaeblein@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 6:02:10 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Gwen Simpson
15 Kimberly Ct
Daytona Beach, FL 32119-1657
[REDACTED]
redhead44.shannon@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 6:14:06 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Wendy Kitzmann
8611 N Shore Trl N
Forest Lake, MN 55025-8346
dwkitz@aol.com
dwkitz@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 6:14:07 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Laura Grzybowski
7508 Juniper Blvd S
Middle Village, NY 11379-1825
[REDACTED]
lagr1116@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 6:19:39 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Ana Santomé
rúa Nova nº9
SANTIAGO COMPOSTELA, None 15705
680949892
a.santome.e@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 6:32:00 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Dr. Lauren Coe
4303 Mapledale Ave
Cleveland, OH 44109-2317

lcoeangel@bex.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 6:32:00 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Angela Chilcher
1711 S Roca
Mesa, AZ 85204-7264
[REDACTED]
joyfulmind@msn.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 6:44:09 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Mary Keene
PO Box 13265
Port Saint Lucie, FL 34979-3265
[REDACTED]
snowleopard0427@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 7:02:11 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Sue Eanes
311 Dupuy Ave
Colonial Heights, VA 23834-3208
[REDACTED]
tbjnt3@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 7:02:22 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Megan Devlin
27 Shady Ave
Wakefield, MA 01880-3936
[REDACTED]
meg.devlin1@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 7:14:21 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Karen Witkus
7 Belvidere St
Pittsburgh, PA 15205-2842
[REDACTED]
karwi06@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 7:14:30 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Adriana Arce
Venezuela 2373
Buenos Aires - Argentina, None 01096
4942.8313
amoar1958@yahoo.com.ar

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 7:14:32 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Shane Mandelik
2211 Camelia Dr E
Statesboro, GA 30461-8041
[REDACTED]
golddogconsulting@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 7:32:07 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. cristian cejas
Lacar y Aconcagua
villa maria, AR 59000
[REDACTED]
dognet_22@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 7:32:11 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Lourdes Escobar
Col. Santa Martha
San Pedro Sula, Cortes, None 504
98509107 lourdesbeatriz75@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 7:44:18 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

I have seen 2 injured panthers in a classroom setting where they were being shown to school children. That has made the Florida panther a special interest to save them from extinction!!

Sincerely,

Mrs. Janet Warren
2121 SE Dolphin Rd
Fort Pierce, FL 34952-4930

jdgl@bellsouth.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 7:44:49 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Roxy Geldart
6189 53 54 Cir
Coral Springs, FL 33068
[REDACTED]
laughintoez@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 7:44:49 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Rebecca Claire
333 Santa Rita Ave
Palo Alto, CA 94301-3942

rebecca@claire.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 8:02:12 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Jovohn Hornbuckle
329 Teakwood Ln
Cedar Hill, TX 75104-2942
[REDACTED]
nhornbuckle@gmx.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 8:08:18 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Janice Speed
5610 Jarman St
Colorado Springs, CO 80906-8209
[REDACTED]
speedandspeed@msn.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 8:14:23 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Jessica de Marville
2012 Bedford Ave # 1
Brooklyn, NY 11226-1402

jessica.de.marville@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 8:14:31 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Anthony Malzone
188 Bearfort Rd
West Milford, NJ 07480-1450

tmalzone@optonline.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 9:02:23 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Marquita Mills
8702 Redcoat Ct
Louisville, KY 40291-2646
[REDACTED]
mmoniquemills@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 9:32:16 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Joanne Werick
65 Lancaster Ave
Buffalo, NY 14222-1403
[REDACTED]
citygirl65@juno.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 9:32:22 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

Please, PLEASE, don't remove the protection that our panthers so desperately need! Our roadways are dangerous enough for them, they need ask the help they can get until their numbers are up so much that they need to range farther up through Florida and can be established falls throughout the state.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you. We appreciate you support in this matter.

Sincerely,

Ms. Jennifer Tiziani
2207 Columbus Ave
Alva, FL 33920-1809

jenniwren@live.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 9:32:26 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Clay St. John
934 W Moreno Ave Apt 3
Colorado Springs, CO 80905-1748
[REDACTED] cs_719@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 9:51:21 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. María Vargas
Calle 18 sur No. 69-71
Bogotá, None 110831
[REDACTED]
mayte0584@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 10:14:42 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Charles Wolf
PO Box 597
Stowe, VT 05672-0597
[REDACTED]
cw10631@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 10:14:47 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Dr. Anna Lawler
973 Edgewood Rd
Yardley, PA 19067-3156
[REDACTED]
annalawlerphd@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 10:32:52 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Caisey Rose Hoffman
497 Wayside Rd
Baskerville, VA 23915-1511
[REDACTED]
firesongktreva@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 10:44:47 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Rebecca Jaffe
490 Glenwood Pl SE
Atlanta, GA 30316-1820

plaid423@comcast.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 10:53:13 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Dirk Hall
14322 Admiralty Way Unit 44
Lynnwood, WA 98087-1739

hallcoseattle@msn.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 11:02:19 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Cecilia Gonzalez
18715 Clover Glen Ln
Houston, TX 77084-3860
[REDACTED]
lauracorona1@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 11:02:20 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Melinda Alvey
1583 W 200 N
Greenfield, IN 46140-8612

malvey@hrtc.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 11:02:25 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Debs Hubbard
4 Hodgetts Place Ashhurst
Palmerston North, None 4810

debshubbard@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 11:14:57 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Laura Thomas
1010 Novato Dr
Oxnard, CA 93035-1717

laurabeathomas@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 11:15:06 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Barbara Tapia
11909 Woodland Way
Frisco, TX 75035-6302
[REDACTED]
desertsk8r1@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 11:21:58 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Ashley Quaal
509 Colony Ct
Potterville, MI 48876-9513
[REDACTED]
dodgegirl037@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 11:32:48 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Jared Arney
5940 SW 99th Ter
Cooper City, FL 33328-5741
[REDACTED]
jaredarney@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 11:32:48 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. sherry mason
94 Spinnaker Cir
South Daytona, FL 32119-8550
[REDACTED]
masonstad@cfl.rr.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 13, 2017 11:44:57 PM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. charlyn moore
2010 Newfound Harbor Dr
Merritt Island, FL 32952-2841
[REDACTED]
itstowing@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 12:02:31 AM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Reba Reiser
5433 S 1300 W
Salt Lake City, UT 84123-5336

reba@chillywilly.org

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 12:15:01 AM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Dorothy Neff
11063 E Rosebush Rd
Coleman, MI 48618-9636
[REDACTED]
neffd99@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 12:32:33 AM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Suzanne Ortiz
51 Plymouth Rd
Hammonton, NJ 08037-3010
[REDACTED]
suzannealone7@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 12:32:35 AM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Toni Ostroskie
613 Vista Ln
Ione, CA 95640-5422

toni.ostroskie@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 12:32:36 AM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Heather Rider
New Mexico
New Mexico, NM 87500
[REDACTED]
riderfit@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 12:32:41 AM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Emily Young
1052 State Rd
Effort, PA 18330-8001
[REDACTED]
emilytayloryoung@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 12:32:42 AM

Aug 13, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Robert Banever
2961 Royal Oaks Dr
Duarte, CA 91010-1416

bbanever@earthlink.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 1:02:43 AM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Kimberly DesJardin
2681 Sheldon St
Roseville, MN 55113-1860
[REDACTED]
kimberlyandlilo@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 1:14:58 AM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Cynthia Romberger
310 W Nopal Pl
Chandler, AZ 85225-2664
[REDACTED]
clr310@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 1:32:40 AM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Isabel Shammar
4793 S Townsend Way
Kearns, UT 84118-7239
[REDACTED]
isabella440@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 2:02:46 AM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Diana Walgis
1713 E Hatton St
Pensacola, FL 32503-4837
[REDACTED]
dwalgis@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 2:15:06 AM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Dana Longo
2169 Jason Nathan Dr
San Antonio, TX 78236-1031
[REDACTED]
dana_longo@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 2:32:58 AM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Bonden Lyons
4226 NE Grand Ave
Portland, OR 97211-3411
[REDACTED]
blyons9090@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 2:32:59 AM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Dr. Eva Holtzer
kis merengo 4.
eger, None h3300
36422488 utaholt2@t-online.hu

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 2:33:08 AM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Clarence Bolin
918 W Ranch Rd
Boise, ID 83702-1438

balein@q.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 2:33:10 AM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Sandra Pocholec
25236 Trinity St
Veneta, OR 97487-8742
[REDACTED]
sdwhatwillitbe@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 3:52:46 AM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Heather Bragg
3810 Del Monte Dr
Houston, TX 77019-3020

heatherable@me.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 4:45:36 AM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Matteo Sisti
Via Emilia, 26/A
Redavalle, None 27050
[REDACTED]
yoda94@alice.it

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 5:03:28 AM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Claudia Veronica Garcia
Ciudad de la Paz 982
Bs As, AR 14260
11345566
claudia_veronica@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 5:45:36 AM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Frank Luera
9957 S Fairfield Ave
Chicago, IL 60655-1638
[REDACTED]
frankjluera@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 6:03:16 AM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Penny Johnson
234 Sunset Blvd
Beverly Hills, CA 902103539
042 779 345
pennyjohnson@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 6:45:39 AM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Dr. Karolina Absolonova
Vysehradská 7
Praha 2, None 12800
000000000 karolina.absolonova@seznam.cz

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 7:33:42 AM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Lucia Russo Delmonte
Via della pace 46
Terricciola, None 56030

luciarussodelmonte@icloud.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 7:40:31 AM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Dr. Susan Kelly
557 Old Stage Rd
West Halifax, VT 05358-7965
[REDACTED]
drsuekelly@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 8:33:10 AM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Sandra vickers
northwood middx
london, KS 66699

sandrawhiskersvickers@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 8:33:13 AM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Michael Cosentino
260 Ashwood Dr
Brick, NJ 08723-3304
[REDACTED]
mikemjflumbing@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 8:33:16 AM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Peg Rogers
1786 County Road 509
Ignacio, CO 81137-9724

pegrogers9@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 9:03:25 AM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Sheila Murphy
814 Ashfield Ct
Edgewood, KY 41017-9680
[REDACTED]
sunniemurphy@me.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 9:03:25 AM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Charlotte Watson
5 Northview Cottages Clement Street
Hextable, None BR8 7PH
[REDACTED]
charlottew10@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 9:03:28 AM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Leslie Marino
400 Dan Main Rd
Norwich, NY 13815-3433

leslie116@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 9:33:32 AM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Alecia Allison
1144 pioneer ave
Pittsburgh, PA 15216
[REDACTED]
alecia.allison77@icloud.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 9:33:36 AM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Jennifer Clemente
7936 Torro Ct
Orlando, FL 32810-2817
[REDACTED]
jrwhite321@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 9:33:38 AM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Terry Rainwater
3918 W 103rd Ct S
Jenks, OK 74037-1929
[REDACTED]
tgrainwater@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 9:33:39 AM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Mafalda Aguilar
Vila Real, 8
5000
VILA REAL, WA 99214
555-55555555
aguilar.mafalda@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 9:46:16 AM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Lori Bukoski
2400 Geddes Ave
Ann Arbor, MI 48104-2713

lbukoski@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 10:03:34 AM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Kathy Ruhl
5808 S Fife St
Tacoma, WA 98409-6234
[REDACTED]
kcruhl@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 10:03:43 AM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Gabriel Alberti
9354 Queens Blvd
Rego Park, NY 11374-1149
[REDACTED]
galberti@schools.nyc.gov

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 10:16:39 AM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Dr. Adarsh Bhardwaj
1010 N 79th Ave
Yakima, WA 98908-4508
[REDACTED]
dr.adarshb@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 11:03:46 AM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Ann Luypaert
Ringlaan
47 Opwijk, MA 01745

ann.luypaert@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 11:03:48 AM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Stephanie Shearer
1090 Westshore Dr
Ridgeway, SC 29130-8839
[REDACTED]
snshearer@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 11:03:50 AM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Renee Gregory
19393 Hickory Rd
Milan, MI 48160-9243
[REDACTED]
mrmwrench@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 11:13:45 AM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Claudia Bourque
7 Radcliffe Dr
Pelham, NH 03076-2911

claudia.bourque@hhhc.org

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 11:13:47 AM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Valarie Kalinevitch
2104 Alex Rd
Wilmington, DE 19808-4802
[REDACTED]
bill2val@msn.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 11:16:28 AM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not down list or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection. These animals are a crucial part of life on our planet, please don't let them disappear.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Melanie Emerich
5105 Mohave Rd
Temple, PA 19560-1131
[REDACTED]
melabycat@comcast.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 11:16:37 AM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Cheryl Combs
2 Brazil Dr
New Egypt, NJ 08533-1515
[REDACTED]
combscheryl@newegypt.us

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 11:16:56 AM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Kristin Hernandez
4 Meeker St
Succasunna, NJ 07876-1429
[REDACTED] krhernandez81@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 11:17:00 AM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Cynthia C
27 Pen Y Bryn Dr
Scranton, PA 18505-2234

cjacmc@verizon.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 11:46:34 AM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Doug Terry
5350 Duffield Dr
Hudson, OH 44236-4159
[REDACTED]
dherry@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 11:46:36 AM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Giorgio Redigolo
Strada carrozzabile san Pietro 32
Sanremo (Italy), None 18038
00393495082400 gengis88@live.it

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 11:46:38 AM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Suzanne Flanagan
23 Larchwood
Bishop's Stortford
Hertfordshire, None CM23 4JS
[REDACTED]
skf79@outlook.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 11:46:41 AM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Audrey Cobler
9273 Hidden Valley Ct
Mentor, OH 44060-7323
[REDACTED]
dairydell2-mail@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 11:46:47 AM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Barbara Ross
PO Box 543
Woodacre, CA 94973-0543

barbaraross5@comcast.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 12:04:56 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Gregg Flanegan
23 Larchwood
Bishop's Stortford
Hertfordshire, None CM23 4JS
[REDACTED]
gregg09@hotmail.co.uk

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 12:04:57 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Sharon Nasholds
403 N College St
Wake Forest, NC 27587-2305
[REDACTED]
sharon.nasholds@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 12:10:23 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. CM Stephenson
9944 Pennsylvania Dr
Thornton, CO 80229-2120

cindistephenon@netscape.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 12:33:58 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

PS over the weekend I read about another panther being killed by a vehicle. We need to do everything possible to protect the few panthers left in Florida in their historical range that we've built out.

Sincerely,

Mr. Dan Flaherty
58 N Collier Blvd
Apt 1710
Marco Island, FL 34145-3721
[REDACTED]
marcobeachcomber@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 12:46:48 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Marla Thompson
28006 Acana Rd
Rancho Palos Verdes, CA 90275-3210
[REDACTED]
mgierthdog@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 12:47:13 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Kimberly Selvage
1941 County Road 228
Ashley, OH 43003-9600

selvagk@nationwide.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 1:04:18 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Terrie Callahan
7059 Franklin Madison Rd
Middletown, OH 45042-1105
[REDACTED]
tlhcallahan68@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 1:04:21 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. joan settina
1475 Beaver Run Rd SW
Hebron, OH 43025-9799
[REDACTED]
joansettina@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 1:17:17 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Kimberley Law
21216 Burke Rd
Smartsville, CA 95977-9500
[REDACTED]
outlawsx2@hughes.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 1:17:18 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. George Mann
4825 206th St
Oakland Gardens, NY 11364-1049
[REDACTED]
darkstorm00@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 1:46:43 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Sofia Heller
5019 Shirley Ave
Tarzana, CA 91356-4427

sofia@hellerhouse.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 1:46:53 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

I respectfully ask that during the five-year review for this species, the panthers not be downlisted or delisted from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Jody Rundle
7386 Calle Real Apt 30
Goleta, CA 93117-1200
[REDACTED]
jodyshome@cox.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 1:47:02 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Lindsey Melickian
6716 Walsh St
Saint Louis, MO 63109-3004
[REDACTED]
lmmelickian@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 2:04:20 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Dr. Rebecca Mackay Smith
35 Wallis St
Beverly, MA 01915-4419
[REDACTED]
rebeccaphd@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 2:04:28 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Elizabeth Clayton
18329 NW Heritage Pkwy
Apt 72
Beaverton, OR 97006-3473
[REDACTED]
garnetrose1919@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 2:04:29 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Joseph Le Blanc
914 Av Laporte
Montreal, QC H4C 2P7
[REDACTED]
joseph1@videotron.ca

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 2:34:28 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Jessica Evans
1550 S Indiana Ave
Apt 512
Chicago, IL 60605-4828
[REDACTED]
fireresq39@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 2:47:16 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Angela Lee
1721 E Colton Ave Spc 85e
Redlands, CA 92374-4940
[REDACTED]
ralee1721@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 2:47:17 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Dr. David Middle-Ground
PO Box 221
Nutrioso, AZ 85932-0221

workforpeace@mail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 2:47:29 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Tatum Connor
675 W Peachtree St NE
Atlanta, GA 30308-1989

tatum.connor@att.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 2:47:34 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Marcus Ranceford-Hadley
Rua Guiomar Novais, 90
Vila do Polônês
Campo Grande, None 79032273
55 67 3326-4932
hadley@terra.com.br

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 3:03:56 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Erin McGanty
1535 Court St NE
Salem, OR 97301-4242

erin.mcganty@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 3:04:02 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Laura Loftin
20 Hopson Rd
Jacksonville Beach, FL 32250-2612
[REDACTED]
laurie.loftin@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 3:17:10 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Paul Zuckerman
1105 E 1st Ave
Salt Lake City, UT 84103-4104

p-zuckerman@comcast.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 3:17:18 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Dr. catherine jakubik
16970 Gentle Slopes Dr
Gravois Mills, MO 65037-4340
[REDACTED]
catherinejakubik@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 3:34:43 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Tammy Singleton
645 NE 10th St Apt 9
Crystal River, FL 34428-3749
[REDACTED]
tes41960@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 3:34:49 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Niko Estella
210 Leora Park St
Port Orchard, WA 98366-1300
[REDACTED]
estellaniko@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 3:34:51 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Jim Staker
1900 W Quinn Rd Trlr 5
Pocatello, ID 83202-2823
[REDACTED]
udemyje@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 3:47:11 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Ginger Metzler
3780 S Dahlia St
Denver, CO 80237-1003
[REDACTED]
gingermetz@comcast.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 3:47:13 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Mark Olenick
11305 S Talman Ave
Chicago, IL 60655-1913

olenick74@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 3:47:23 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Patricia Cummings
348 E Elmwood Ave
Apt 2
Clawson, MI 48017-1643
[REDACTED]
patycaty@msn.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 3:47:23 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Liz Treffinger
840 Gleneagles Dr
York, PA 17404-1157
[REDACTED]
liztreff@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 4:17:02 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Matt Szewczyk
660 Maple Ave
Elizabeth, NJ 07202-2608
[REDACTED]
mattszewczyk@ymail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 4:34:30 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Kara Touzos
6 Standish Cir
Canton, MA 02021-1208
[REDACTED]
ktouz442@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 4:47:49 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Donna Little
605 E Innes St
Salisbury, NC 28144-5161

donna.little@wellsfargo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 4:47:58 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

We love cats, big and small. These wild animals are an important part of the environment.

It is sad and sickening to hear of them being killed in vehicle collisions. Vehicles are not good for people either, resulting in a lot of death and injury, as well as deadly pollution.

The panthers are also God's creation, a part of the Earth God gave us to live on, and we should protect and appreciate them. Ignorance is no excuse for destroying them!

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Cristina Smith
1112 1/2 S Sierra Bonita Ave
Los Angeles, CA 90019-2573

xtynita_sonoma@earthlink.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 4:59:35 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Alana Paterak
2081 Alborada Dr
Camarillo, CA 93010-9282
[REDACTED]
midnightsky35f@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 4:59:47 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Cathleen Jemison
347 Litchfield Ave
Babylon, NY 11702-2033
[REDACTED]
panthingo@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 5:29:39 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. joann van
701 W Wonder View Ave
Estes Park, CO 80517-9129

van8871@netzero.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 6:21:23 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Dede Johnson
2310 Spruill Rd
Caledonia, MS 39740-9485
[REDACTED]
dedejohnson13@cableone.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 6:21:50 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Vernie Shoaf
1720 Old Thomasville Rd
Winston Salem, NC 27107-8677
[REDACTED]
vernieshoaf@triad.rr.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 6:21:56 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.
Christine Hufnagle

Sincerely,

Mrs. Christine Hufnagle
6611 Ferry Rd
New Hope, PA 18938-9728
[REDACTED]
chrissy.hufnagle@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 6:21:59 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Dear Mr. Shindle, The ESA is under threat all over the country. Please protect your corner of it by not delisting Florida panthers. Humans are impacting wildlife at an increasing rate. We need to at least try to protect as many species as we can.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. susan walker
107 C St
Vallejo, CA 94590-3030
[REDACTED]
reverider@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 6:22:05 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Pamela Kedderis
42 Northwoods Rd
Farmington, CT 06032-1017
[REDACTED]
pamjkay@comcast.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 6:22:21 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Erin Carmean
PO Box 232
Arnold, CA 95223-0232

erincarmean@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 6:51:23 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Donna Douglass
8337 Thomson Rd
Elkins Park, PA 19027-1730
[REDACTED]
dpolonisa@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 6:51:23 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Cathy Strum
4017 Rock Maple Ln NW Apt 101
Olympia, WA 98502-6800
[REDACTED]
strumcat@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 6:51:29 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Deanna Rantz
340 Appletree Ave
Camarillo, CA 93012-5178

deanna.rantz@ouhds.k12.ca.us

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 6:51:53 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Ann Marie Sardineer
233 Woodlawn Dr
Trafford, PA 15085-1232
[REDACTED]
acynk@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 7:21:47 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Gerilyn Lane
3841 N High St
Columbus, OH 43214-3747

gerilyn.lane@att.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 7:51:41 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. A Rainwater
345 Shawnee Loop S
Pataskala, OH 43062-8170
[REDACTED]
ajrainh2o@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 7:51:44 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Karen Kaminsky
177 Goodale Dr
Newington, CT 06111-3130
[REDACTED]
k_kaminsky@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 8:21:30 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Bonnie Paul
8828 Rio Grande Falls Ave
Las Vegas, NV 89178-7218
[REDACTED]
catatud@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 8:21:35 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

Please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection. Protect these magnificent animals.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Tia Pinela
684 NeedleBush
Sahuarita, AZ 85629
[REDACTED]
desertdruid@icloud.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 8:21:42 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Erika Toth
2845 Idlewild Dr Apt 201
Reno, NV 89509-1168
[REDACTED]
eriliz37@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 8:21:42 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection. We cannot afford to downlist or delist any endangered species. The panthers deserve better.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Marilyn Perona
5372 Punta Alta
Unit 3e
Laguna Woods, CA 92637-2587
[REDACTED]
wellnessplus2000@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 8:21:54 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Tina Beedle
6324 Blueberry St
Milton, FL 32570-8822
[REDACTED]
Bassnbatz@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 8:51:31 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Bradley Oremland
118 Monroe St
Apt 110
Rockville, MD 20850-2511
[REDACTED]
brado9@eudoramail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 8:51:40 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Gabriella Frey
25 Cherry St
Milford, CT 06460-3414

gabriellafrey@comcast.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 8:51:52 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Laura Brewer
20 Belmont Cv
Covington, GA 30016-5088
[REDACTED]
lsbrewer73@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 8:52:04 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Donna Brown
940 Baums Bridge Rd
Kouts, IN 46347-9706
[REDACTED]
donna@fvogelmann.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 9:21:35 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. SALLY CAUDILL
3799 Danube Dr
Groveport, OH 43125-9458
[REDACTED]
sa.caudill@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 9:21:37 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.
Amanda Gamache

Sincerely,

Ms. Amanda Gamache
6710 Blue Point Dr
Carlsbad, CA 92011-3419
[REDACTED]
gamachemandy@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 9:51:33 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Pam Hannah
1560 W Martin Dr
Mobile, AL 36605-5107
[REDACTED]
yachtdowneaster1@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 9:51:36 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Melissa Olavarria
1790 NE 46th St
Oakland Park, FL 33334-5630
[REDACTED]
msmelio@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 9:51:51 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. J Simmons
107 E 126th St
New York, NY 10035-1606
[REDACTED]
jdhs56@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 9:51:51 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Rosanne Martino
4103 Wood Duck Way
Hendersonville, NC 28792-7980
[REDACTED] rosanne7056@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 10:22:15 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Connie Diernisse
106 Alamo Sq
Alamo, CA 94507-1926

condiern@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 10:22:31 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. William Hambrick
131 Price Ave
Columbus, OH 43201-5407
[REDACTED]
edhambrick@att.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 10:51:34 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Lynne Cruz
825 Gladstone Dr
Vernon Hills, IL 60061-1405
[REDACTED]
maredeaux@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 10:51:35 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Fran Ostempowski
54 Impala Pkwy
Lancaster, NY 14086-1308

fran2454@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 10:51:40 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. David Holley
161 Byrd Dr
Panama City, FL 32404-5976
[REDACTED]
hollejollyman@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 11:21:41 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Penelope Deihl
590 Pamela Ln
Steamboat Springs, CO 80487-8904
[REDACTED]
padeihl@msn.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 11:21:42 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Pamela Miller
6230 Thomas Ct
Tolar, TX 76476-6917
[REDACTED]
pamz@winstonproperties.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 11:21:43 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Dr. David Tilli
75 Four Leaf Rd
Levittown, PA 19056-1922

dtilli@msn.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 11:21:44 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Janet Cook wilderness rd
Danville, KY 40422-1621
[REDACTED]
jemeraldeyes@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 11:21:51 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Debra Alleman
3715 Rolling Meadows Dr
Belleville, IL 62221-0406
[REDACTED]
alleman8@charter.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 11:21:52 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Anna Lambert
4394 Gorgas St
North Port, FL 34287-1622
[REDACTED]
migamom@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 11:21:52 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Jewell Kelley
3245 Castleton St
Grove City, OH 43123-1708

jwllkly@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 11:22:22 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection. Protecting a species is protecting the planet. Biodiversity is extremely important.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Matthew McCarty
1420 Ellis Hollow Rd
Ithaca, NY 14850-9601

mmccarty@twcny.rr.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 12:22:04 AM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Danielle McNeil
69 Tremont St
Salem, MA 01970-1543

danielle_marie10@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 1:21:51 AM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Bill Benjamin
PO Box 87
Deer Harbor, WA 98243-0087
[REDACTED]
billbenjamin1969@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 1:21:52 AM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Larissa Raman
Curlew close
Johannesburg, PA 17240
080000000000 larissaraman@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 1:22:07 AM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection. From all of the biological info I can find, these cats are nowhere near being able to be delisted.

Thank you. Jim Woolly

Sincerely,

Dr. Jim Woolly
30 Pamela Dr
Little Rock, AR 72227-5976
[REDACTED]
jim.carol@sbcglobal.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 1:51:54 AM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Karen Barthelson
3616 N Lloyd Cir
Memphis, TN 38108-2038
[REDACTED]
bartgelsonkaren@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 2:22:06 AM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Dawn Kerner
1166 Madison Ave
Loveland, CO 80537-5035

btns5@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 3:22:01 AM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Heather Kercher
10425 Mark Dr
Waldorf, MD 20601-3901
[REDACTED]
hmkercher@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 3:22:03 AM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Susan Daley
30 Glen Rd
Yarmouth, ME 04096-8135
[REDACTED]
truthseek@icloud.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 3:52:03 AM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Nicolaus Raeber
317 W Dorris Dr
Grand Prairie, TX 75051-3924

zraeber@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 4:52:11 AM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Amanda Monroe-Rubendall
816 W Willow St
Cherokee, IA 51012-1561
[REDACTED]
monroea23@msn.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 5:52:15 AM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Debra Pedersen
8249 State Road 38
Caledonia, WI 53108-9608

dedern1@wi.rr.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 7:52:24 AM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Drissteen Wanger
3600 Red Lion Rd Apt 68d
Philadelphia, PA 19114-1425
[REDACTED]
madmon1016@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 7:52:26 AM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Jan Wegner
13208 Abel Rd
Clinton, MI 49236-9413
[REDACTED]
janwegner@frontier.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 8:22:54 AM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Marsha Cole
520 Starliner Dr
Nashville, TN 37209-2815
[REDACTED]
brandy5959@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 8:52:43 AM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Jan Brown
1544 Lynwood Ave
Fort Myers, FL 33901-5918

jbrown400@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 8:52:47 AM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.
SAVE PANTHERS!!

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Catherine Tomasko
536 Forrest Ave
Drexel Hill, PA 19026-1403
[REDACTED]
indierockgirl@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 9:22:46 AM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

We very much enjoyed our vacation in Florida last year. Seeing a panther while we were in the Everglades was one of the best highlights!

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you Sir!

Ken

Sincerely,

Mr. ken ellsperman
18 Barn Dr
New Bloomfield, PA 17068-8657
[REDACTED]
kenellsperman@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 9:52:55 AM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Renee Andrada-Melo
961 Ben Ingram Ln
Tracy, CA 95377-8566

roseyone209@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 9:52:57 AM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Becky Seaton
2172 Mayne Trace Rd
Waverly, TN 37185-2972

becky.seaton@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 10:23:50 AM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Lindsey Hemingway
660 Tennis Club Dr Apt 302
Ft Lauderdale, FL 33311-4020
[REDACTED] lahlahland02@icloud.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 10:53:14 AM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Martin Henz
w paris st
Tampa, FL 33601
[REDACTED]
toedai@yahoo.de

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 11:23:16 AM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Kimberly Pergola
30 Truesdell Ave
Lugoff, SC 29078-9226
[REDACTED]
krengleh@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 11:23:17 AM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Shelly Logan
1516 E Park Row Dr
Arlington, TX 76010-4624
[REDACTED]
shellylogan@texashealth.org

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 11:23:24 AM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Nancy Taylor
16 Woolard Ave
Albany, NY 12205-5026
[REDACTED]
velveteenpony@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 11:23:26 AM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Diana Cohen
21 ne 19 street
Miami, FL 33123
[REDACTED]
dvalers@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 11:30:52 AM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Edith Lobrot
30 avenue jean perrin
sceaux, CA 94901
[REDACTED]
edithlobrot@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 11:53:35 AM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Ethan Osman
22 Hillside Ave
Great Neck, NY 11021-1945

aegoliusfunereusrichardsoni@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 11:53:40 AM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Judy Pasqualini
7937 Kenton Ave
Skokie, IL 60076-3510
[REDACTED]
jjpasq@comcast.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 12:23:30 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Richard Radtke
32 Rose Dr
Fruitland Park, FL 34731-6710
[REDACTED]
ricster49@icloud.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 12:23:32 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Imogen Taylor
515 N Holland St
Portland, OR 97217-1563
[REDACTED]
imogen.taylor@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 12:23:34 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Bente Humphrey
1103 E Kaley St
Orlando, FL 32806-4138
[REDACTED]
logspotab@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 12:23:34 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. BRIAN SANTO
840 W Wayne St
Paulding, OH 45879-1539

bsanto74@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 12:23:42 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Moira Henderson
12 Laurel Brae
Springfield, None KY15 5AD
[REDACTED]
satanicgothchick666@yahoo.co.uk

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 12:53:28 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Sherry Holinaty
5349 Jennifer Dr
Fairfax, VA 22032-3815
[REDACTED]
sherryholinaty@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 1:23:34 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Marjorie Brenneke
22262 S Thompson Gateway Rd
Oregon City, OR 97045-9776

marge@brenneke.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 1:53:25 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Ian Garman
16281 E Glasgow Dr
Loxahatchee, FL 33470-4017
[REDACTED]
igarman@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 1:53:29 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. ELLIOT Dilliplane
2400 N Parkview Dr
Norristown, PA 19403-3619
[REDACTED]
only22magnum@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 1:53:31 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Cindy Wargo
4195 Arlington Dr
Brunswick, OH 44212-3998
[REDACTED]
c_wargo@msn.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 2:23:33 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Panther recovery has not come anywhere close to achieving the requisite minimum viable population size of many hundreds of individuals--at least 500--to be safe from genetic drift, splintering and subsequent loss of subpopulations due to human activities, mass loss of individuals to known and emerging disease threats, additional habitat loss and fragmentation, and other continuing and emerging threats. ESA protections need to be retained until populations have recovered sufficiently to be able to easily withstand adverse impacts from all threats, continuously and intensively monitored for the foreseeable future, and until the threats to achieving minimum viable population sizes have been removed or adequately mitigated. All of the above must be determined by professional scientists in a scientifically defensible manner.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Dr. Kirsten Krueger
26 Shawnee Way
Stafford, VA 22556-6655

ercgroup@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 2:23:35 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Susan Blackwell
21 Beech Drive
Mold, None CH7 1TD
[REDACTED]
susanblackwell07@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 2:53:33 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Melinda Robbins
211 Grove Rd
Rye, NH 03870-2508

thecorbetts@mac.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 3:23:42 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Rachel Clee
1648 10th Ave
San Francisco, CA 94122-3625
[REDACTED]
flybye527@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 3:53:42 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Chris Silcox
1033 Country Club Ln
Ashland, OH 44805-4330
[REDACTED]
ctsilcox06@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 4:24:16 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. dorinda stainton
#5 2200 Glenwood School Drive
Burlington, VT 11111
[REDACTED]
rindylea@outlook.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 4:24:16 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Kathleen Shetler
5 Walnut Ct
Moorestown, NJ 08057-1809
[REDACTED]
rosrua@comcast.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 4:24:18 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Sharon Lebon
300 Gilkeson Rd
Pittsburgh, PA 15228-1051
[REDACTED]
sherrilsherrid@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 4:53:59 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Nancy Linden
126 Heath Rd
Medford, NJ 08055-9129
[REDACTED]
nalkal@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 4:54:01 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Victoria Gaunt
6084 Rock Glen Dr
Elkridge, MD 21075-5444
[REDACTED]
victorialerene@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 4:54:45 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Sheryl Mann
Turquoise Lake Ct
Colorado Springs, CO 80924
[REDACTED]
robertandsherylmann@isitreal.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 4:54:54 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Karen Chow
6490 Havenside Dr
Sacramento, CA 95831-1504
[REDACTED]
kaychow@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 4:55:53 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection. We really can preserve the earth for future generations, there is no requirement that we obliterate every animal bird tree and plant on the planet to increase some notion of monetary award. Future humans will look back on the past two centuries as the turning point, for better or for worse, and you have a unique role to play.

Do not bow to pressure from the callow Washington residents. They will be with us for a short time, but the future children will be saddened and appalled if you allow the panther to slip away.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Lisa Neal
PO Box 10729
Bainbridge Island, WA 98110-0729
[REDACTED] neal4law@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 5:24:00 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Lynette von Elsner
944 Kahili St
Kailua, HI 96734-4045
[REDACTED]
lynetteve808@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 5:24:15 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Kim Beach
721 Island View Cir
Port Hueneme, CA 93041-3449
804157522 kimfischlein@icloud.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 5:24:28 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Levinson Rodriguez
14930 Sandra St
Mission Hills, CA 91345-1615
[REDACTED]
lrbmj14@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 5:24:39 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Cameron Loehr
3535 Bryant St
Denver, CO 80211-2852
[REDACTED]
camflam@comcast.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 5:24:41 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Eileen Higgins
32 S Wade Ave
Apt 2
Washington, PA 15301-3623
[REDACTED]
eileenh123@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 5:54:36 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. K Warner
117 N Mills Rd
Ventura, CA 93003-3029
[REDACTED]
pkrudester@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 5:55:08 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Julia Versan
Molodeznaya 215
Novopolotsk, MD 21144
371258 wersan11@mail.ru

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 6:23:47 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Mikii Opahle
S5635 Lehman Rd
Baraboo, WI 53913-9271
[REDACTED]
kiilea@mac.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 6:23:47 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Elena Malash
23825 Lennie Cir
Chugiak, AK 99567-5568
[REDACTED]
malashil@mail.ru

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 7:24:19 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Joyce Villano
16 Bay St
Bellmore, NY 11710-3801
[REDACTED]
kobe11710@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 7:53:56 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Don and Jane Vanderbush
109 Daring Dr
Cherryville, NC 28021-9128
[REDACTED]
jvanderbush@sc.rr.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 7:54:00 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Marilyn Phinney
532 N Main St
Brewer, ME 04412-1218

mphinney3@roadrunner.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 7:54:11 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Lourdes Cabrales
29 Blue Jay Dr
Clementon, NJ 08021-5624
[REDACTED]
lcabrales@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 7:54:29 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Richard Zarlengo
116 Smithtown Blvd
Apt 7b
Nesconset, NY 11767-1756
[REDACTED]
rezarlengo@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 7:54:42 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Stephanie Latham-Magee
71 Starview Dr
Torrington, CT 06790-4453
[REDACTED]
stephanie.lathammagee@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 8:23:45 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Amber Lee
402 E 10th St Apt B
Benton, KY 42025-1364
[REDACTED]
watergirl1373@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 8:24:13 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Tracy Nagy
7 Burton Ave
Trumbull, CT 06611-4518
[REDACTED]
tnagy7375@charter.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 8:53:45 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Katherine Hadden
147 Creek Meadow Ln
Rochester, NY 14626-3008
[REDACTED]
katherinehadden88@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 8:54:29 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Diana Daniels
3005 Santa Buena Way
Sacramento, CA 95818-3600

ddaniels77@comcast.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 9:24:03 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Nicky Muir
1 Evans Bay Pd
Wellington, None 6021
212569271
nixmuir@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 10:31:02 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Tina Koufas-Eisbacher
14845 Wildwood Dr
Largo, FL 33774-4820

tinaeisbacher@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 10:31:05 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Kelly Satter
742 Elk Lake Dr
Baton Rouge, LA 70816-1789

ksattel@lsu.edu

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 10:34:18 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Teresa Lakusta
16165 108 Ave NW
Edmonton, AB T5P 4E3

tlakusta@shaw.ca

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 10:54:14 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. R Trivedi
wexford hills road
Riverview, FL 33569
[REDACTED]
gggixer@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 10:54:34 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Catherine Maske
2300 Patriot Ln
Oshkosh, WI 54904-6938

cjmaske@new.rr.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 10:56:05 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Dr. Anita Pereira
5800 Burlingame Ave
Richmond, CA 94804-5210

apereiraos@outlook.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 10:56:06 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Carlos Gonzalez
18715 Clover Glen Ln
Houston, TX 77084-3860
[REDACTED]
sheldonylaura@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 11:24:36 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

With only 200 panthers, please let them live, procreate. Leave them be and safe

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Gail Cooper
1709 Center Groton Rd
Ledyard, CT 06339-1942
[REDACTED]
gc7145@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 11:24:50 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Tara Williams
2159 Bunts Rd
Lakewood, OH 44107-6152
[REDACTED]
tarawilliams30@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 11:54:20 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Meaghan Buziak
44 Miller St
Guelph, ON N1L 1P2
[REDACTED]
mculbert18@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 11:54:25 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Madyson Millard
857 Salem Church Rd
Lincolnton, NC 28092-8863

madysonlinn@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 15, 2017 11:54:38 PM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Alethéia Brabo
Avenida Atlântica 327
Florianópolis, None 88095700
5548998005905 aletheiamaues@yahoo.com.br

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 12:24:11 AM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Corneilous Kiernan
1017 Sandpiper Ct
Dunedin, FL 34698-8221
[REDACTED]
nkimale@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 12:54:41 AM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. christine McCann
23317 60th Pl S
Kent, WA 98032-6481

spikemike693@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 12:54:49 AM

Aug 15, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Barbara Deane
205 Bash Rd
Toms River, NJ 08753-7205
[REDACTED]
barbd68@msn.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 1:32:18 AM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Joyce Brogger
1327 Waterfall Way
Concord, CA 94521-3531

jbrogger@juno.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 1:54:47 AM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Dalyce Cheveldae
PO Box 2357
Melville, SK S0A 2P0

cheveldae@accesscomm.ca

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 2:24:49 AM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. simona sartini
via pantano 139
pesaro, None 61122
[REDACTED]
antares03@inwind.it

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 4:31:40 AM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. MIRIAM LAFFI
CORSO EUROPA 413
GENOVA, PA 16132
+393498846641 piccikiki@yahoo.it

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 5:24:49 AM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Katherine Ventry
7 Farnum St
Blackstone, MA 01504-2288
[REDACTED]
wildflower210@msn.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 5:24:57 AM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Brooke Strickland
432 Misty Oaks Run
Casselberry, FL 32707-2821
[REDACTED]
brookestrickland11@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 6:25:02 AM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Rhonda Phares
6629 Chasteen Ln
Barnhart, MO 63012-1145
[REDACTED]
rockinrhonda72@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 7:25:11 AM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Odalys Soto
9214 SW 148th Ct
Miami, FL 33196-4123
[REDACTED]
lillypie3@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 7:25:25 AM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Jann carlvi
a essen, OH 45130
234234 rock_islove@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 7:55:44 AM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Lara Portnoy
9615 W 116th Pl
Overland Park, KS 66210-3104
[REDACTED]
lara.portnoy@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 8:55:37 AM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Paul Price
216 Eastchester Dr.
High Point, NC 27262
[REDACTED]
zooley@juno.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 9:25:28 AM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Diana Hofmann
9992 88th St
Seminole, FL 33777-1946
[REDACTED]
dianahofmann7@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 9:55:40 AM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Marion Baker
14780 Dove Rd
Moody, TX 76557-3433
[REDACTED]
amoodymarion@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 9:55:49 AM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Eileen Fairbrother
4180 Stone Bridge Rd
Morrisville, NY 13408

efairbrother@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 9:55:58 AM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Wiebke Dumrath
felanitx
campos, NJ 07630
66362567
dumrath.wiebke@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 10:25:50 AM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Deanna Cancilla
400 New Castle St Apt 3
Butler, PA 16001-5352

deannamarie1173@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 10:25:54 AM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Ty Wills
58 N Park St
Madison, WI 53715-1278

tawills@wisc.edu

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 10:55:57 AM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Hailey Wood
607 S Main St
Wauconda, IL 60084-2477

hwood2291@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 10:55:58 AM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Anna Chmielewska
37073 Daisy St
Palmdale, CA 93550-7374
[REDACTED]
chmiela@email.laccd.edu

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 10:55:58 AM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Karen Fierro Arcos
Cdla. Entre Ríos
Samborondón, None 00000 000000000
zoy_lakaren@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 11:25:59 AM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Brenda Hazzard
395 Middle Rd
Brentwood, NH 03833-6013
[REDACTED]
brendahazzard@comcast.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 11:26:00 AM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Tim and Bonnie Mulligan
7000 Kingfisher Ln
Lanham, MD 20706-3911
[REDACTED]
timnbonmul@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 11:55:38 AM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. William Howes
1451 Felton St
Deltona, FL 32725-5936
[REDACTED]
irishclover05@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 11:55:50 AM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Clete Eastwood
36400 NE Ridgeview Dr
Yacolt, WA 98675-4618

cceastwood@centurylink.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 12:26:14 PM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Taylor Phelps
315 Queen Anne Rd
Stevensville, MD 21666-3549
0 kiarathementalcat@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 12:26:21 PM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.
Marsha Lynch
1939 Snover Ave
North Port, FL 34286

Sincerely,

Mrs. Marsha Lynch
1939 Snover Ave
North Port, FL 34286-6898
[REDACTED]
mbelre@cs.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 12:56:02 PM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Liz DeFonce
39 Clark Wardner Rd.
Gabriels, NY 12976
[REDACTED]
izzor93@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 12:56:12 PM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. David Dewenter
220 S Hopi St
Sandy Valley, NV 89019-1774
[REDACTED]
desert-goat@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 12:56:16 PM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. sandi paul
4 Calle Vaqueta
Rancho Santa Margarita, CA 92688-1250
[REDACTED]
tpaul61@cox.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 12:56:17 PM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Linda Cerne
8106 Georgetown Ave
Los Angeles, CA 90045-2609
[REDACTED]
lcerne22@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 1:26:03 PM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Judith Howell
353 Fairway Ln Apt H
Spruce Pine, NC 28777-8867
[REDACTED]
judiannhowell@icloud.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 1:26:06 PM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Alexandra Augustin
Kelsterbacher Str 115
Mörfelden Walldorf, DE 64546
[REDACTED]
augale@web.de

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 1:55:55 PM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Karin Hårdstedt
Brantingsg
Stockholm, None 11535
[REDACTED]
karinina.h@gmail.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 1:55:58 PM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection. It's tragic and ironic that Florida's official state animal is one the most endangered mammals on Earth.

In addition to the moral responsibility we have as stewards of the environment to safeguard the future of this threatened species for its intrinsic value, we must bear in mind the broader, positive environmental benefits of safeguarding Florida panthers. Panthers are an umbrella species. Protecting them and the unspoiled, wild territory each one needs to survive--an average of 200 square miles for a single male--protects many other plants and animals that live there. At the top of the food chain, these cats help keep feral hog numbers in check and deer, raccoon and other prey populations balanced and healthy.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Frances Costa
Boulder
Boulder, CO 80304
frances.costa@colorado.edu

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 1:56:01 PM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Mark Vatousiou
97 Granger Dr
Feeding Hills, MA 01030-1623
[REDACTED]
mvpv88@comcast.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 2:26:10 PM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Melodie Terwilliger
2014 Oak Springs Dr
Cordova, TN 38016-4080
[REDACTED]
mrterwilliger@comcast.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 2:26:11 PM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Kathy Erndl
1018 Hastie Rd
Pittsburgh, PA 15234-1112
[REDACTED]
kathye1118@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 3:26:24 PM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection. We are losing animals left and right nowadays, please help these beautiful cats make it to the future.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Jessica Galvan
8086 SW Nancy Dr
Arcadia, FL 34269-3807
[REDACTED]
teamgalvan9@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 3:56:57 PM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Nadia Burguin
Appartement 641 - 1 rue Jean Moulin
Longjumeau, None 91160
[REDACTED]
nanoub91@neuf.fr

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 3:57:06 PM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Savannah Daras
33 Holly St
Portland, ME 04103-4111
[REDACTED]
savannahlynne@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 4:26:41 PM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Jean Yedkois
1209 Canterbury Rd
Clearwater, FL 33764-4815

jyedkois@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 4:26:43 PM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Janice Tinkham
4115 State Route 7 N
Cheshire, OH 45620-9609
[REDACTED]
tinkhamj@ohio.edu

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 4:57:01 PM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Lorraine Frazier
PO Box 652
Stonington, ME 04681-0652
[REDACTED]
notpersonal999@outlook.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 4:57:03 PM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Linda Nazeck
1623 Wolf Rd
Woodbine, KS 67492-8805
[REDACTED]
lsnazeck@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 4:57:07 PM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection. Make the moral and responsible choice. Our planet and children are counting on you.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Holly McDonough
533 S Tumbleweed Rd
Anaheim, CA 92807-4631
[REDACTED]
kroqcaligirl@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 5:26:37 PM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Vanessa Edwards
4525 Murietta Ave
Sherman Oaks, CA 91423-2980
[REDACTED]
vanessaedwards523@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 5:56:22 PM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Kim Springer
6145 Wise Rd
Hermitage, PA 16148-7103
[REDACTED]
springer0707@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 5:56:30 PM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Gail Madsen
1980 Parliament St
Eugene, OR 97405-1037
[REDACTED]
gmadsen@protonmail.ch

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 6:27:00 PM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Stephanie Becker
3539 Ferring Loop
Mullins, SC 29574-5646
[REDACTED]
fishyfigment@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 6:27:05 PM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Malea Delcambre
2560 Westwinds Dr
Iowa City, IA 52246-4000
[REDACTED]
malea.buck@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 6:27:06 PM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Lindsay Pugh
18432 Oak Ridge Ln
Disputanta, VA 23842-6803
[REDACTED]
pugh.lindsay.a@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 7:56:36 PM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Natasha Viti
10975 Bluffside Dr
Apt 1423
Studio City, CA 91604-4448
[REDACTED]
natashaviti@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 7:56:50 PM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. s cook
17875 SE Division St
Portland, OR 97236-1085

swfcook@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 8:26:32 PM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection. We should do everything we can to preserve their environment and protect their lives. Why do humans think they are more important than the animals that God created to inhabit this beautiful planet? Please do not change their status on the Endangered Species list.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Barbara Mitterer
1132 Forbes Trce
Tarpon Springs, FL 34689-2924
[REDACTED]
amit@geckobytes.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 8:56:17 PM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Hannah Lange
1412 Green Valley Rd
Mount Horeb, WI 53572-2363
[REDACTED]
langehannah26@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 8:56:27 PM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Heidi Wintersteller
1250 Blanchester Rd
Cleveland, OH 44124-1326

heidiw52087@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 9:26:17 PM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Alejandra Anderson
2.do.ret.de loma del recuerdo#77lomas de vista hermosa
Cuajimalpa, ME 05100
[REDACTED]
andersona.mx@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 9:26:18 PM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.
Julissa Gomez

Sincerely,

Ms. Julissa Gomez
28592 Herrera St
Valencia, CA 91354-3060

jgomez3@att.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 9:56:24 PM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. William Kress
2864 Italy Rd
Export, PA 15632-1158

kresspress2@windstream.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 9:56:43 PM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Lorena Sanhueza
3719 Briarhill St
Mohegan Lake, NY 10547-1003
[REDACTED]
lasanhueza21@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 9:56:52 PM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Annette Miele
2864 Italy Rd
Export, PA 15632-1158

tmiele0519@windstream.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 10:26:35 PM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Dr. Sylvia Thompson
1351 15th St
Los Osos, CA 93402-1417

gosylvia@yahoo.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 10:33:55 PM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Susan Anderson
901 1/2 S 2nd Ave
Virginia, MN 55792-2806
[REDACTED]
makoons.lb@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 10:56:29 PM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Kallie Benes
914 W 25th St Apt 1
Houston, TX 77008-1858
[REDACTED]
kalze@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 11:26:40 PM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Julian Yerena Jr
13571 E 3rd St
Parlier, CA 93648-2706

julianjr559@sbcglobal.net

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 11:26:54 PM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Cheryl Robison
3820 Pershing Ave
Fort Worth, TX 76107-4531
[REDACTED]
beaglemom@charter.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 11:27:06 PM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Shelly Jones
5440 S 3535 W
Taylorsville, UT 84129-7833
[REDACTED]
snpj673@aol.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Wednesday, August 16, 2017 11:56:33 PM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss GABRIELA VARGAS
ahuatepec, camino a tepoztlan.
cuernavaca, None 62300
[REDACTED]
vargasgabriela@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 12:26:34 AM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Linda Berntsen
58 Maple St
Sherborn, MA 01770-1023
[REDACTED]
curtissmom123@hotmail.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 12:56:37 AM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Linda Askey
5191 Sicard Hollow Rd
Birmingham, AL 35242-5623
[REDACTED]
graciemom@me.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 12:56:39 AM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Kathy Myers
26537 SE 224th St
Maple Valley, WA 98038-6619
[REDACTED]
kathyjmyers@netzero.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 12:56:49 AM

Aug 16, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. C. Vacca
805 Silverbrook Ct
Nashville, TN 37221-6568

cheri506@comcast.net

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 1:26:53 AM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Marg Quesnell
23463 Dahlia Cir
California, MD 20619-6151
[REDACTED]
kmquesnell@sbcglobal.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 1:56:46 AM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Yuliana Borrero
111 W Longview Ave
Stockton, CA 95207-4332

yulianaherrera@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 2:26:47 AM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. G S
987 Hester Road
Hermitage, TN 37076

shadowstillwater@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 2:26:47 AM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Laura Smith
3440 W Bryn Mawr Ave
Chicago, IL 60659-3442
[REDACTED]
peachsmith@comcast.net

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 3:26:48 AM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Tessa Pou
12349 NW 26th St
Coral Springs, FL 33065-7813
[REDACTED]
sanibelroo@aol.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 4:02:47 AM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Jessie Osborne
3615 Vista Bella Unit 8
Oceanside, CA 92057-7012
none
jessieo62388@att.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 5:27:01 AM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Marion Krüger
Stockumer Bruch 14
Witten, ND 58454
023021698118 marionk8@web.de

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 6:33:26 AM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Stephanie Fleming
15283 Monticello Dr
Bristol, VA 24202-4103

snfva82@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 7:27:36 AM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Brennan Madden
406 N Division St
Ann Arbor, MI 48104-1443

pronaus@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 7:27:37 AM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Vanessa Anderson
The Willows
Bedfordview
Johannesburg, None 2007
[REDACTED]
vanessaja@mweb.co.za

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 7:57:25 AM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Juanita Kolinski
9848 Luna Cir Apt 102
Naples, FL 34109-4526

neetzjmk@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 8:57:19 AM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Laetitia Amadei
190 avenue Saint Exupéry
Bron, None 69500
0033602713456 laetitia8269@outlook.fr

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 9:29:01 AM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Julie Clee
26 raincliffe grove
leeds, None ls9 9lp
juliecle5@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 10:28:04 AM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Gina Juliano
500 Tabernacle Rd
Medford, NJ 08055-9722
[REDACTED]
ginajuliano@me.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 10:28:34 AM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Sharon Rose
499 Washington Ave
Ewing, NJ 08628-2822
[REDACTED]
lpproses@gw.njsp.org

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 10:58:41 AM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss María Jesús Martínez
Calle Ercilla
Madrid, MA 28005
696282182 marietapitu@yahoo.es

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 11:28:03 AM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Jean-Michel Ricard
866 Knapp Dr
Santa Barbara, CA 93108-1941
[REDACTED]
jm01@ricardclan.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 11:58:28 AM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Michael Tassis
Koridalleos 7
Athens, None 112 52
[REDACTED]
pharbo@yahoo.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 11:58:30 AM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Susan Strauss
10 Windover Rd
Greenwood Village, CO 80121-1216
[REDACTED]
smcstrauss@comcast.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 11:58:31 AM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Sheryl Schweitzer
5805 Waxham Ct
Apt 102
Virginia Beach, VA 23462-5645
[REDACTED]
ny2va@ymail.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 12:29:20 PM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Chere Fuessel
2585 Hurricane Loop
Tennessee Ridge, TN 37178-5363

fusilier@peoplestel.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 12:29:24 PM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Katie G
8642 Lenfant Pl
Manassas, VA 20112-2433
[REDACTED]
katie.godigkeit@comcast.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 12:29:24 PM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Peg Miller
82 Nancy Dr
Canton, NC 28716-4678

kittieseverywhere@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 12:58:12 PM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Dawn Demaske
5426 Nicollet Ave Apt 311
Minneapolis, MN 55419-2629
[REDACTED]
djdemaske@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 1:06:13 PM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Paula Kulig
301-172 Sherwood Ave
Toronto, ON M4P 2A8

plkulig@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 1:28:22 PM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Paula Nicks
192 SW Quail Pl
Fort White, FL 32038-3020

paula@floridacrotchwood.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 1:28:43 PM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Samantha Gitman
1705 Whitpain Hls
Blue Bell, PA 19422-1363
[REDACTED]
samantha.gitman@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 1:58:08 PM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Mary Yeagley Bower
36153 Burbage Rd
Ocean View, DE 19970-3594
[REDACTED]
myeagley@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 2:28:10 PM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Melissa Wales
PO Box 172
Saxtons River, VT 05154-0172

zeta369@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 2:28:27 PM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. kathleen butler
2450 Crowsnest Dr
Hobart, IN 46342-3820
[REDACTED]
kathy.6283@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 3:28:26 PM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Chandra Perkins
16052 Hawthorne Ave
Fontana, CA 92335-5423

writer-chandraleighperkins@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 4:58:39 PM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Cheryl Lederman
12 County Road 15
Espanola, NM 87532-9814
[REDACTED]
cllflashcow@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 5:28:55 PM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Sally Falckh
24001 Highway 140
Eagle Point, OR 97524-5552
[REDACTED]
littlebashu@aol.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 5:29:18 PM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Keiko Martinez
9 Mayfair Dr
San Francisco, CA 94118-2729
[REDACTED]
anoodlehead@gmail.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 5:58:49 PM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Susan Harmon
3890 Inverness Dr
Beaumont, TX 77707-5454
[REDACTED]
61harmon@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 5:58:50 PM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Mark Guthrie
343 Henry St
South Amboy, NJ 08879-1731
[REDACTED]
mguthrie.social@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 5:58:58 PM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Kathleen Smith
750 Bradford Loop
The Villages, FL 32163-6037

knsmith2818@att.net

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 6:58:23 PM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Stella Hamilton
35 E 85th St
Apt 5cn
New York, NY 10028-0162
[REDACTED]
bw85stella@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 6:58:29 PM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Karen Moore
7 Cranberry Ln
Chelmsford, MA 01824-4445
[REDACTED]
moorekjenn@verizon.net

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 6:59:03 PM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Christine B.
14241 Tribute Place Dr
Apt 203
Huntersville, NC 28078-3456
christinebiela@yahoo.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 7:05:01 PM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Kathleen Schenk
3954 Cochran St
Simi Valley, CA 93063-2381
[REDACTED]
kathieschenk@gmail.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 7:28:33 PM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Dr. Peg Urban
5355 SW Willow Ave
Corvallis, OR 97333-2901
[REDACTED]
pegurban@comcast.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 7:58:44 PM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Marissa Bevilacqua
375 76th St Apt 1d
Brooklyn, NY 11209-3121
[REDACTED]
bronte777@msn.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 8:28:29 PM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Paula Duker
8400 Oceanview Ter
Apt 201
San Francisco, CA 94132-3262

paula.duker@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 8:28:33 PM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Natalie Ciric
4 Gillespie Street
Middy, DE 19708
402429753 natalieciric@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 8:28:34 PM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. kathryn heggs
1902 Alfresco Pl
Louisville, KY 40205-1810
[REDACTED]
cnormandekalb@gmail.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 9:58:43 PM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Mary Lauer
2352 Alclobe Cir
Ocoee, FL 34761-8947
rex6142011@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 9:58:43 PM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Angie Madrid
9492 Flowering Cottonwood Rd
Orlando, FL 32832-5566
[REDACTED]
a.madrid68@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 9:58:43 PM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection. They are beautiful creatures and deserve to be on this earth as much as we do. Don't let them disappear!

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Jenny Lo
1825 Connecticut Ave NW
Washington, DC 20009-5708
[REDACTED]
ksvogt@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 9:58:43 PM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Mary Kearney
155 griffin avenue
Port st joe, FL 32456
[REDACTED]
lucykearney@mac.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 9:58:44 PM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Laura Shaddak
5 Paloma St
Oswego, NY 13126-4033
[REDACTED]
shaddaklab@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 10:28:44 PM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Paola Dabdoub
1411 W Michigan Ave
Phoenix, AZ 85023-1445
[REDACTED]
dabdoubpaola@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 10:28:51 PM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Kate Douglas
50 Ophelia Dr
Maumelle, AR 72113-6291
[REDACTED]
kdouglas1120@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 11:28:49 PM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Lynn Price
PO Box 19235
South Lake Tahoe, CA 96151-0235

wintress_1@hotmail.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 11:28:50 PM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Jeannette Radford
54183 Eastview Dr
Bristol, IN 46507-9076

jeannettenr@juno.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 11:28:54 PM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Trisha O'Keefe
3205 Schumacher St NW
Albuquerque, NM 87120-5621
meandmyguitar16@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 11:59:00 PM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Andrea Iaderosa
4608 Kingswell Ave
Los Angeles, CA 90027-4312
[REDACTED]
ammvi@juno.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 18, 2017 12:29:06 AM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Dr. Sean Choquette
1430 Freeman Street
Prince George, BC 98109
[REDACTED]
seanicon.ss@live.ca

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 18, 2017 12:58:58 AM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection. It's m shame that all our wildlife isn't protected like it should be, please help.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Linda Hanes
449 Garrison Pl
Virginia Beach, VA 23452-5329
[REDACTED]
linspa@cox.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 18, 2017 1:59:43 AM

Aug 18, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Shannon Irvine
9608 Shoshone Way
Louisville, KY 40258-1838
[REDACTED]
tobysmomforever@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 18, 2017 7:05:50 AM

Aug 18, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. SEDA ARIG
cakmak mah.
istanbul, Türkiye, None 34100
[REDACTED]
sedaarig@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 18, 2017 8:29:41 AM

Aug 18, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Charmaine White
127 Kulp Rd
Catawissa, PA 17820-7915
[REDACTED]
horselover930@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 18, 2017 8:29:42 AM

Aug 18, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Tarra McComb
8400 S M 52
Owosso, MI 48867-9274
[REDACTED]
mccombracing1@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 18, 2017 8:59:54 AM

Aug 18, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Elisabetta Salterio
Viale Bianca Maria 35
Milano, None 20122
[REDACTED]
e.salterio@libero.it

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 18, 2017 8:59:55 AM

Aug 18, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Joyce Webb
325 Kettering Rd
High Point, NC 27263-1719
[REDACTED]
webb-jo@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 18, 2017 9:00:05 AM

Aug 18, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Melanie Christy
5022 W 86th Pl
Crown Point, IN 46307-1606
[REDACTED]
machristy1@msn.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 18, 2017 11:30:02 AM

Aug 18, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Shannon Eyre
25 Shawley Crescent
Surrey, None KT18 5PQ

shannoneyre@hotmail.co.uk

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 18, 2017 12:00:28 PM

Aug 18, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Lisa Combs
18465 Lost Horizon Dr
Littleton, CO 80127-9760
[REDACTED]
lcombs1025@googlemail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 18, 2017 12:00:42 PM

Aug 18, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Zoe Quinn
194 Federal St
1
Salem, MA 01970-3248

zquinn@live.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 18, 2017 12:30:33 PM

Aug 18, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Constance Bush
74 Plummer Dr
Raymond, ME 04071-6168
[REDACTED]
connbu9@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 18, 2017 12:30:40 PM

Aug 18, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Terri Lynas
186840 Lander Drive NW
Elk River, MN 55330
[REDACTED]
lynas.terri@1stchoicepediatric.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 18, 2017 1:00:23 PM

Aug 18, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Carolina SantaMaria
109 Clyde Ave
Hopelawn, NJ 08861-1545

csantamaria23@aim.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 18, 2017 1:00:29 PM

Aug 18, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Stephanie Hubsch
2823 Broad River Rd
Columbia, SC 29210-6027

shubsch83@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 18, 2017 2:00:42 PM

Aug 18, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Mary Stanek
5167 Credit River Dr
Savage, MN 55378-4620
[REDACTED]
marystoffers@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 18, 2017 2:00:49 PM

Aug 18, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Roman Tikhonov
Khabarovskaya street 4-222
Moscow, None 107589
[REDACTED]
ragaman@inbox.ru

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 18, 2017 3:00:27 PM

Aug 18, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Ankit Sood
21622 Marguerite Pkwy Apt 254
Mission Viejo, CA 92692-4414
[REDACTED]
sood_ankit_1986@yahoo.co.uk

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 18, 2017 3:00:50 PM

Aug 18, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Judith Huff
711 Clymer St
New Castle, DE 19720-4902

judy135356@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 18, 2017 3:30:35 PM

Aug 18, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Janet Slack
7106 W Rim Dr
Austin, TX 78731-2025

janet@rocsoftware.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 18, 2017 3:30:43 PM

Aug 18, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Robyn Mery
36 Audubon Dr
Ossining, NY 10562-2915
[REDACTED]
robynlmery@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 18, 2017 4:00:47 PM

Aug 18, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Joseph Tortolero
1286 Lexington Way
Livermore, CA 94550-6518

jltorto@msn.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 18, 2017 4:00:52 PM

Aug 18, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Lynn Zwigard
23 Long Ridge Rd
Randolph, NJ 07869-4565

burnett55@verizon.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 18, 2017 4:30:49 PM

Aug 18, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Libby Osnes-Erie
2120 8th Ave SE
Lake Stevens, WA 98258

libbyoe@live.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 18, 2017 4:30:57 PM

Aug 18, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Jeannette Rohde
11 Speed St
Brentwood, NY 11717-6411
[REDACTED]
jrsbr4@optonline.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 18, 2017 6:31:15 PM

Aug 18, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Gina White
800 Country View Ter
Birmingham, AL 35215-2131

ginaw19@bellsouth.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 18, 2017 6:31:30 PM

Aug 18, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Chelsi Williams
3219 Lincoln St
Columbia, SC 29201-1205
[REDACTED]
chelsiwill@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 18, 2017 7:00:55 PM

Aug 18, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Lynn Brian
477 Atterbury Blvd
Hudson, OH 44236-1676
[REDACTED]
lbrian@comlsoftware.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 18, 2017 8:30:52 PM

Aug 18, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. CarolAnn DePalma
PO Box 156
Salisbury, CT 06068-0156

csd1946@att.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 18, 2017 8:31:15 PM

Aug 18, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Coleen Lunsford
131 Orlemann Ave
Oreland, PA 19075-1615

cbarros.lunsford@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 18, 2017 8:39:25 PM

Aug 18, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Linda Heath
12112 Indian Hollow Rd
Grafton, OH 44044-9735
[REDACTED]
heathster52@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 18, 2017 10:01:10 PM

Aug 18, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Olga Escobar
8532 Wave Cir
Huntington Beach, CA 92646-2118

o-escobar@socal.rr.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 18, 2017 10:31:11 PM

Aug 18, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Michelle Gorton
310 W. 32nd st
Kearney, NE 68845
[REDACTED]
michelle.gorton@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 18, 2017 11:01:14 PM

Aug 18, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

Some progress has been made but it pales in comparison to the harm that has come to panthers at our hands, please consider how quickly the progress can be undone. During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Mariela Diaz
6645 SW 95th Ct
Miami, FL 33173-2261
[REDACTED]
pasyon8@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 19, 2017 12:31:21 AM

Aug 18, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Tray Armbrust
2348 E Vistoso Village Pl
Oro Valley, AZ 85755-1925

tarmbrust@severitus.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 19, 2017 5:01:55 AM

Aug 19, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Kelle Peeplez
2428 E Apache Blvd Apt 403
Tempe, AZ 85281-5191
[REDACTED]
dovewater@outlook.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 19, 2017 5:31:55 AM

Aug 19, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Gary Kaplan
8 Hamlin Rd
Edison, NJ 08817-2906
[REDACTED]
gkaplan52@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 19, 2017 7:02:16 AM

Aug 19, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Chris Rehl
7463 Bowen Rd
Saranac, MI 48881-9564
[REDACTED]
c_rehl@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 19, 2017 8:32:09 AM

Aug 19, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Diane Sapone
70 Tamarack St
East Northport, NY 11731-4629
[REDACTED]
chatcat959@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 19, 2017 11:32:31 AM

Aug 19, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. donald spampinato
4 Baldwin St
Farmingdale, NY 11735-4333
[REDACTED]
ariel7th@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 19, 2017 12:32:41 PM

Aug 19, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Sean Haider
13046 London Rd
Orient, OH 43146-9171

sean.a.haider@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 19, 2017 1:32:49 PM

Aug 19, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Vivien Francis prins
Zuidland, FL 32145
0031181452554 vc.francis@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 19, 2017 2:02:52 PM

Aug 19, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

I just don't understand why humans are so selfish and hurtful. Why do you only think about yourselves, money and greed? Life is precious. And an animals life is just as precious. They look to us to protect them. WE, the same human race that took over this country, state and killed for fun....disregarded their lives for our own benefit. Let's finally make a difference and make more humane, selfless decisions for them. They deserve a safe area to live, free of hunters and stupid people. They deserve to be protected and well...BE. Save our panthers. Do not downlist or delist them from the Endangered Species Act.

Thank you.

Donna Smith
215 Jacala Dr.
Merritt Island, FL 32953

Sincerely,

Mrs. Donna Smith
215 Jacala Dr
Merritt Island, FL 32953-3145

smithmail5@cfl.rr.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 19, 2017 2:32:49 PM

Aug 19, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Amara Meerholz
296 Gap Creek Rd
Apt B
Fletcher, NC 28732-8559
[REDACTED]
easy lucky free 328@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 19, 2017 3:02:49 PM

Aug 19, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. P Tux
2575 S Rochester Rd
Rochester Hills, MI 48307-4442

store59@ptux.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 19, 2017 4:02:56 PM

Aug 19, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Sarah Peters
1401 Blair Mill Rd
Silver Spring, MD 20910-4853
[REDACTED]
petesa05@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 19, 2017 4:03:00 PM

Aug 19, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Danielle Sunley
102 W Ann St
Tallula, IL 62688
[REDACTED]
sunley14@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 19, 2017 4:33:03 PM

Aug 19, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Alyssa Henke
10814 S Shepard Ave
Oak Creek, WI 53154-7068

alyssa_hnk@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 19, 2017 4:33:11 PM

Aug 19, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. A J Hawkins
2515 W Tremont Ct
Richmond, VA 23225-1957
[REDACTED]
rwsc19@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 19, 2017 4:41:19 PM

Aug 19, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Judith Vincent
2258 Shelton St SE
Salem, OR 97301-6644

jwvincent1@msn.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 19, 2017 5:03:05 PM

Aug 19, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Esti Provencio
PO Box 414
Chino, CA 91708-0414

p12ovencio@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 19, 2017 5:03:06 PM

Aug 19, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Michael Martin
10844 E 1000 N
Kendallville, IN 46755-9712

m_martin52@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 19, 2017 8:03:33 PM

Aug 19, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Rachel Rose
1361 N Harrison Ave
Fresno, CA 93728-1544
[REDACTED]
calirose249@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 19, 2017 8:41:30 PM

Aug 19, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Kylie Hines
532 Sooner Rd
Bartlesville, OK 74003-1445
[REDACTED]
lostscrolls.amber@aim.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 19, 2017 9:03:34 PM

Aug 19, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Shondelle Luba
PO Box 76
180 Red Star Road
Greenfield Park, NY 12435-0076

aintmsbhaven@hughes.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 19, 2017 9:33:33 PM

Aug 19, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Linsey Betts
PO Box 336
Grand Canyon, AZ 86023-0336
[REDACTED]
linseybetts@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 19, 2017 11:39:54 PM

Aug 19, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Lindalee Claugus
2343 Wildwood Blvd
Toledo, OH 43614-4163

lindaleeora@att.net

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Sunday, August 20, 2017 12:33:48 AM

Aug 19, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Debi Chernak
PO Box 1194
Conifer, CO 80433-1194

debichernak@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 20, 2017 1:33:55 AM

Aug 20, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Macie Schriner
402 N Jenison Ave
Lansing, MI 48915-1253

macie.schriner@gmail.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Sunday, August 20, 2017 2:33:58 AM

Aug 20, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Laura Floriano
13533 Crape Myrtle Dr
Moreno Valley, CA 92553-4396
[REDACTED]
popirux@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 20, 2017 3:03:57 AM

Aug 20, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Andy Ramirez
10200 Bolsa Ave
SpC 19
Westminster, CA 92683-6735
[REDACTED]
andyram87@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 20, 2017 3:04:02 AM

Aug 20, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Nancy Cowan
9241 Vancouver Dr
Sacramento, CA 95826-2242
[REDACTED]
cat0614@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 20, 2017 4:04:07 AM

Aug 20, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Jet Asha
7 Green Street malibu, CA 90031-1928

jet-asha@outlook.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 20, 2017 4:40:35 AM

Aug 20, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Kathey Nolan
2651 Parish Lndg
Mt Pleasant, SC 29466-7964
[REDACTED]
chinarose207@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 20, 2017 6:34:25 AM

Aug 20, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Alexa Mendoza Hernandez
Morgan Hill
Morgan Hill, CA 95037

alexamendoza04@icloud.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 20, 2017 12:05:21 PM

Aug 20, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Christine Tashjian
10620 N Platt River Dr
Austin, TX 78748-2348

cwnj237189@gmail.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Sunday, August 20, 2017 12:34:52 PM

Aug 20, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Beverly Hasan
601 Cedar Ridge Dr
Newton, KS 67114-9790

beverly.hasan@newtonmed.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 20, 2017 2:05:03 PM

Aug 20, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Dina Balint
1401 Bay Rd
Miami Beach, FL 33139-3715
[REDACTED]
dinab207@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 20, 2017 2:05:05 PM

Aug 20, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Chelsea Fields
3207 Saddlebrook Ave
Tampa, FL 33618-1309
[REDACTED]
greenday867@hotmail.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Sunday, August 20, 2017 2:05:10 PM

Aug 20, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Sharon Bradley
4200 Corcoran St
Alexandria, VA 22309-1311
[REDACTED]
skbradley97@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 20, 2017 2:35:04 PM

Aug 20, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. dana clippert
552 S Tanglewood Rd
Versailles, IN 47042-9570
[REDACTED]
dclippert@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 20, 2017 2:35:09 PM

Aug 20, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Brian Buechle
5826 S Logan Ct
Centennial, CO 80121-1120
[REDACTED]
buech347@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 20, 2017 2:35:14 PM

Aug 20, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Jessica Wölbart
Niederhofweg 2
Gunzgen, HI 46170
[REDACTED]
jess.w1310@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 20, 2017 3:35:07 PM

Aug 20, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Ashley Boone
2 Mustang Dr
Leicester, NC 28748-9451
[REDACTED]
ashleyrboone.ab@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 20, 2017 4:05:29 PM

Aug 20, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Eric Martinez
375 Beckley Pl
Saint Charles, MO 63304-1030
[REDACTED]
evmart91@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 20, 2017 4:35:15 PM

Aug 20, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Barb Slough
4371 Hunters Dr
Highland, MI 48356-1935
[REDACTED]
highlandbarb@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 20, 2017 4:35:32 PM

Aug 20, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Jon Lyons
8640 Greenwood Ave
Munster, IN 46321-2614

jonclyons@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 20, 2017 5:05:11 PM

Aug 20, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Suzan Davies
1871 E 53rd Ave
Anchorage, AK 99507-1604
[REDACTED]
lshpaws@gci.net

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Sunday, August 20, 2017 5:35:08 PM

Aug 20, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Suzanne Newman
40 El Toyonal
Orinda, CA 94563-2228
[REDACTED]
suz.new@hotmail.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Sunday, August 20, 2017 6:05:22 PM

Aug 20, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Kathy Daugherty
PO Box 427
Floyds Knobs, IN 47119-0427
[REDACTED]
toshowwp@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 20, 2017 7:35:49 PM

Aug 20, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Enrique Elizondo
PO Box 3675
La Pine, OR 97739-0088
[REDACTED]
redhawkthunder@msn.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 20, 2017 8:06:01 PM

Aug 20, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Ed Atkins
1820 Panther Ridge Rd
Boulder Creek, CA 95006-8733
[REDACTED]
hearthdance@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 20, 2017 8:35:39 PM

Aug 20, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Mark Ciesielski
520 Knightsbridge Ct
Apt C1
Andalusia, PA 19020-7779
[REDACTED]
markciesielski@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 20, 2017 9:05:41 PM

Aug 20, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Jacque MacArthur
7019 Mills Rd
Winter Park, FL 32792-7415
[REDACTED]
jacise@earthlink.net

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Sunday, August 20, 2017 9:05:45 PM

Aug 20, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Victoria Gaunt
6084 Rock Glen Dr
Elkridge, MD 21075-5444
[REDACTED]
victorialerene@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 20, 2017 9:14:08 PM

Aug 20, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Vicki Blaess
4 Diamond Ln
Howell, NJ 07731-1870
[REDACTED]
vikster1229@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 20, 2017 10:35:49 PM

Aug 20, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Shannon Irwin
164 Cambridge Ct
Clifton, NJ 07014-1372

shanirwin71@gmail.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Sunday, August 20, 2017 10:35:49 PM

Aug 20, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Karen Leigh
13210 Fiji Way Unit N
Marina Del Rey, CA 90292-7069

karensworld@ca.rr.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 20, 2017 10:35:53 PM

Aug 20, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Matthew Stuart
213 Rue Hickson
Verdun, QC H4G 2J3

matthewstuart2012@icloud.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 20, 2017 11:36:19 PM

Aug 20, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Amail Perkins
7900 Tatum Waterway Dr
Miami Beach, FL 33141-1904
[REDACTED]
amailamail@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 21, 2017 2:06:08 AM

Aug 21, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Tamika L Miller
39281st Street SE #402
Washington, DC 20032

tamikamiller@ymail.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Monday, August 21, 2017 2:36:14 AM

Aug 21, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Mildred Herrera
2100 Wallace Ave Apt 5c
Bronx, NY 10462-2888
[REDACTED]
nandy7797@verizon.net

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Monday, August 21, 2017 3:06:16 AM

Aug 21, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Hillie Janssen
12 Bahari
Rancho Mission Viejo, CA 92694-1810
[REDACTED]
tomhillie@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 21, 2017 4:36:19 AM

Aug 21, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Gayle Smith
10435 Fairway Ln
Carmel, CA 93923-8034
[REDACTED]
gayle@yankee-pt.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 21, 2017 4:36:20 AM

Aug 21, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. FUENTES DANIELLE danielle
8 rue Roger Payrastra
ALBI, VI 81000

danielle.fuentes@direccte.gouv.fr

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Monday, August 21, 2017 7:36:46 AM

Aug 21, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

As a New York resident who also owns property in Florida, the natural habitat of Florida is more important to me than development of large areas of that state.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Daniel Mohr
3854 W Branch Rd
Allegany, NY 14706-9722
dpmpbm@localnet.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 21, 2017 8:06:48 AM

Aug 21, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Merrilou Neigenfind
323 Gringley Hill Rd
Fort Mill, SC 29708-6945

mbneigenfind@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 21, 2017 8:36:41 AM

Aug 21, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. sylwia ukowska
jamontta
torun, None 87100
06307720
sylwiaob@wp.pl

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Monday, August 21, 2017 8:37:00 AM

Aug 21, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Sarah Apfel
201 E 17th St
New York, NY 10003-3607
[REDACTED]
mfprtoo@yahoo.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Monday, August 21, 2017 9:07:12 AM

Aug 21, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Ann-Jeanette Brown
1536 Harrah Rd
Niles, MI 49120-8742
rammsjbbrown@sbcglobal.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 21, 2017 9:36:54 AM

Aug 21, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Larry Smith
22356 Collington Dr
Boca Raton, FL 33428-4744
[REDACTED]
larry.bullseye@comcast.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 21, 2017 10:08:07 AM

Aug 21, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Sara Roy
100 avenue de la Falaise
Quebec, FL 33011

ser_55555@hotmail.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Monday, August 21, 2017 11:07:47 AM

Aug 21, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Yvette StarCross
3200 Payne Ave Apt 802
San Jose, CA 95117-3551
[REDACTED]
cherry5by5@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 21, 2017 11:07:53 AM

Aug 21, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. JENNIFER SCHUMACHER
4333 15th Ave S Apt 103
Fargo, ND 58103-3351
[REDACTED]
jennifer.joanne79@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 21, 2017 11:08:08 AM

Aug 21, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

It's time we start doing what is right and protecting the beautiful animals with whom we share this planet! Extinction is FOREVER!

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. P Chafin
4026 Ashley Ct
Holiday, FL 34691-2605

chafin51@verizon.net

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Monday, August 21, 2017 11:37:37 AM

Aug 21, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Janine Ody-Miller
12875 S Dixie Hwy
La Salle, MI 48145-9612
[REDACTED]
janineody@crystalloglass.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Monday, August 21, 2017 1:37:57 PM

Aug 21, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Tracie Conley
81 Evergreen Ct
Franklin, OH 45005-3071
tlcolorist95@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 21, 2017 2:07:22 PM

Aug 21, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection. It is up to we humans, the superior species, to protect EVERY living thing on Our Home the Earth.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Randi Hoffmann
95 Rubina Ln Apt 12
Fond Du Lac, WI 54935-6719
[REDACTED]
randi.hoffmann@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 21, 2017 2:07:27 PM

Aug 21, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. James Duggan
3 South St
Holbrook, MA 02343-2038
[REDACTED]
dugganja2@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 21, 2017 3:07:34 PM

Aug 21, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Julie Robertson
501
Mt Olive, IL 62069

julie.robertson@firstclearing.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 21, 2017 3:08:00 PM

Aug 21, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Crystal Richards
2304 Belair Rd
Baltimore, MD 21213-1222
[REDACTED]
crazedelvisfan1976@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 21, 2017 3:13:39 PM

Aug 21, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Sue Drummond
1237 Long Shore Dr
Indianapolis, IN 46217-5270
[REDACTED]
sdmountain@ymail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 21, 2017 3:38:12 PM

Aug 21, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Elizabeth Myers
1849 Washington Ave S
Minneapolis, MN 55454-1065
[REDACTED]
elmyers@inil.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Monday, August 21, 2017 4:07:37 PM

Aug 21, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Jesse Soldal
17w548 Hawthorne Ave
Wood Dale, IL 60191-1434

jessesoldal12@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 21, 2017 4:07:42 PM

Aug 21, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. JC Coyne
101 Highland Ct
Lake Mary, FL 32746-4204
[REDACTED]
jenric74@hotmail.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Monday, August 21, 2017 5:07:58 PM

Aug 21, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Anita Tsang-ling
5625 Farmdale Ave
Unit 9
North Hollywood, CA 91601-1778
[REDACTED]
anitatsangling@gmail.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Monday, August 21, 2017 6:19:23 PM

Aug 21, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Marilyn Stern
8421 NW 59th St
Tamarac, FL 33321-4286

9tweet@gmail.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Monday, August 21, 2017 6:19:41 PM

Aug 21, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Andrea Rogoff
16102 Main St
La Puente, CA 91744-4745
[REDACTED]
andrea83hilario@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 21, 2017 7:19:17 PM

Aug 21, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Ramona Sikkes
Koningin Wilhelminakade 155
IJmuiden, None 1975 GJ

ramonasikkes@hotmail.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Monday, August 21, 2017 7:49:40 PM

Aug 21, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Laurie Kittelson
6315 Paris Ave N
Stillwater, MN 55082-6838
norseaurora@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 21, 2017 9:19:47 PM

Aug 21, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Teri La Rocca
12 Hall St
Brooklyn, NY 11205-1304
[REDACTED]
freestarcfirehorse@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 21, 2017 9:19:48 PM

Aug 21, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Nicole Willett
7 Christina Rd
Milford, MA 01752-4767
[REDACTED]
nicole21715@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 21, 2017 9:19:49 PM

Aug 21, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Sandra Angelini du tram vinalmont, None 4520
0000 wolfarctique@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 21, 2017 9:19:54 PM

Aug 21, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Marta Hoyos
Carrera 14A 151A-39 T.3 1001
Bogotá D.C., NY 11001
[REDACTED]
maroyos@gmail.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Monday, August 21, 2017 9:49:55 PM

Aug 21, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Rachel Jett
1017 Fox Trace Ct
Port Orange, FL 32127-4978
syberianeyes@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 21, 2017 10:50:02 PM

Aug 21, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Tiffany Haney
394 Vester St Apt 107
Ferndale, MI 48220-1742
[REDACTED]
haney_tiffany@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 21, 2017 10:51:31 PM

Aug 21, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. ana maria pimentel
2360 Valleywood Dr SE
0-11
Grand Rapids, MI 49546-7752
[REDACTED]
diliberto77@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 21, 2017 11:20:27 PM

Aug 21, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Satya Putumbaka
12815 30th Ave N
Plymouth, MN 55441-2709
[REDACTED]
satyaputumbaka@gmail.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Monday, August 21, 2017 11:20:29 PM

Aug 21, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Joan Silaco
9003 222nd St
Queens Village, NY 11428-1405
[REDACTED]
m4lucky@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 22, 2017 12:50:41 AM

Aug 21, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Amber Curtis
1396 County Road 13
Wauseon, OH 43567-9444
[REDACTED]
adaisy2002@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 22, 2017 2:20:58 AM

Aug 22, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Margaret Vining
46
Arthur st
mcr, None BL3 1HT

mrgrtvining@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 22, 2017 2:50:54 AM

Aug 22, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection. this beautiful top predator deserves its places in our state.

Thank you.

Kthryn Grace

Sincerely,

Ms. Kathryn Grace
2835 Red Oak Dr
Jacksonville, FL 32277-3481
[REDACTED]
gracesflgarden@gmail.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Tuesday, August 22, 2017 3:51:08 AM

Aug 22, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Lynn Epstein
25 Loch Ln SW
Lakewood, WA 98499-1472
[REDACTED]
lynnlouise44@comcast.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 22, 2017 4:51:09 AM

Aug 22, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Elitsa Hristova
Bulgaria
Rousse, None 7006

elitsa.hristovaa@gmail.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Tuesday, August 22, 2017 5:21:10 AM

Aug 22, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Jessica Gawlik
2743
Kendallville, IN 46755

andromeda_goddess_99@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 22, 2017 7:21:31 AM

Aug 22, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Rebecca Clarke
19 Fairfax Avenue
Basildon, Essex, None SS13 1AY

beccie-x@hotmail.co.uk

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 22, 2017 8:53:29 AM

Aug 22, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Kara Tillotta
473 Congdon St
Middletown, CT 06457-2065
[REDACTED]
kmoon246@yahoo.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Tuesday, August 22, 2017 9:52:08 AM

Aug 22, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Debbi Reed-Savory
4140 Cokesbury Rd
Rockford, IL 61103-9530
[REDACTED]
deb.reedsavory@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 22, 2017 11:22:48 AM

Aug 22, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Tonia Wallner
824 N 67th St
Wauwatosa, WI 53213-3905

toniawallner@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 22, 2017 11:22:59 AM

Aug 22, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Madhavi Paladugu
12815 30th Ave N
Plymouth, MN 55441-2709
[REDACTED]
madhavi.paladugu9@gmail.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Tuesday, August 22, 2017 11:52:24 AM

Aug 22, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Cherye Hoff
8 Yale St
Groveland, MA 01834-1556
reehoff@comcast.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 22, 2017 11:52:38 AM

Aug 22, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Lisa Corl
510 Saint Louis Rd
Collinsville, IL 62234-2499

lisa.corl@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 22, 2017 7:58:58 PM

Aug 22, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Dorothy Milazzo
425 E Penn St
Long Beach, NY 11561-4439
[REDACTED]
dorothyannmilazzo@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 22, 2017 8:59:17 PM

Aug 22, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

We need to do all we can to protect these awesome creatures! By doing so we will also help other species and that can only add to Florida's tourism industry and furthering eco-tourism.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Jasmine Browne
3401 W Oakellar Ave
Tampa, FL 33611-2921
[REDACTED]
jasminebabin@yahoo.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Tuesday, August 22, 2017 9:28:55 PM

Aug 22, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Connie - Raper
2614 Woodmont Dr
12
Durham, NC 27705-2760

ckraper@nc.rr.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Tuesday, August 22, 2017 9:28:59 PM

Aug 22, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Lynn Elliott
2614 Woodmont Dr
Durham, NC 27705-2760

craper@nc.rr.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Tuesday, August 22, 2017 9:29:00 PM

Aug 22, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Sarah Gross
528 Gilmore Ave
North Tonawanda, NY 14120-4310

sarahgross24@roadrunner.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 22, 2017 10:29:14 PM

Aug 22, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Kim Small
8100 Haven Hill Ln
Auburn, CA 95603-7312
[REDACTED]
raosmall92@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 22, 2017 10:59:04 PM

Aug 22, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Jamie Renda
1010 Saxon Ct
Brandon, FL 33510-2719

jamie.renda@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Tuesday, August 22, 2017 11:29:07 PM

Aug 22, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Carl Kozub
851 Springfield Ave
Summit, NJ 07901-1138

carlkozub@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 23, 2017 12:29:12 AM

Aug 22, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Deanna Gomez
5401 Gable St NW
Albuquerque, NM 87120-4444

deannagomez1@comcast.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 23, 2017 12:29:20 AM

Aug 22, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Kristofor Bloomquist
96 Nottingham Dr
Brick, NJ 08724-3742
[REDACTED]
krisflav@yahoo.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Wednesday, August 23, 2017 1:29:18 AM

Aug 23, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Roxana Shannon
22703 Sierra Lake Ct
Katy, TX 77494-2303
[REDACTED]
roxana_shannon@yahoo.ca

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 23, 2017 1:59:26 AM

Aug 23, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Paola Viteri
14462 41st Ave
Flushing, NY 11355-1541
[REDACTED]
vite66@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 23, 2017 6:59:56 AM

Aug 23, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Maria Pizzo
500 Hagey Pl
Trappe, PA 19426-2262
[REDACTED]
mpizzo17@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 23, 2017 9:00:35 AM

Aug 23, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Jacqueline Morales
3 Pembroke Ln
Bedminster, NJ 07921-1640
[REDACTED]
jcgulotta@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 23, 2017 1:01:18 PM

Aug 23, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Kathy Lovinger
187 E 3rd St
Deer Park, NY 11729-6009

kathy.lovinger@bracewell.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 23, 2017 2:53:06 PM

Aug 23, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Veronica Ryan
450 West Ave
Slaughter, LA 70777-3205

vryanryan@yahoo.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Wednesday, August 23, 2017 3:05:56 PM

Aug 23, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Barbara Kleckner
1100 Riverside Dr Lot 6b
Lake Havasu City, AZ 86404-8558
[REDACTED]
angelpaws2000@yahoo.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Wednesday, August 23, 2017 3:08:44 PM

Aug 23, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Scott Kershner
3605 Mount Royal Blvd
Glenshaw, PA 15116-1323
kuphoof@yahoo.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Wednesday, August 23, 2017 4:15:22 PM

Aug 23, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. bonny austin
506 N Division St
Auburn, WA 98001-4021
[REDACTED]
princessbumblebee69@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 23, 2017 4:36:15 PM

Aug 23, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Donna Bishoff
1792 Licking Creek Rd
Parsons, WV 26287-8729
[REDACTED]
djbishoff4@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 23, 2017 4:43:55 PM

Aug 23, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Jessica Black
2685 S Julian St
Denver, CO 80219-5832

jdblack@primalx.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 23, 2017 5:05:14 PM

Aug 23, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Tim Schmitt
641 N Harrison St
Arlington, VA 22205-1135
[REDACTED]
timmschmitt@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 23, 2017 6:33:05 PM

Aug 23, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Jocelyne Drolet
16 Chadwick Cir
Nashua, NH 03062-4794
[REDACTED]
jd102102@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 23, 2017 7:02:22 PM

Aug 23, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Stacey Babcock
473 N State St
Apt A
Caro, MI 48723-1539

ctuagentbauer24@hotmail.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Wednesday, August 23, 2017 8:34:43 PM

Aug 23, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Michelle Parr
11171 Wickford Dr
North Tustin, CA 92705-2363
[REDACTED]
mishparr@yahoo.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Wednesday, August 23, 2017 9:03:53 PM

Aug 23, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

I urge you to not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act protection. They are an iconic species that needs protection and may be at threat of extinction. We as Americans need to protect all our species from extinction.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Anna and Kevin Hornick
500 King Dr Apt 1201
Daly City, CA 94015-2948
[REDACTED]
ahornick19@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 23, 2017 9:04:38 PM

Aug 23, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Dr. Sharon Jung
148 Sycamore St Apt 3
Somerville, MA 02145-2731

sharonjung@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 23, 2017 11:32:07 PM

Aug 23, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Chrissy Bailey
3318 Lilly Rd NE # A
Olympia, WA 98506-3063
[REDACTED]
chrissybailey2000@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Wednesday, August 23, 2017 11:33:22 PM

Aug 23, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Toni Neill
PO Box 122
Petoskey, MI 49770-0122
[REDACTED]
tonineill99@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 24, 2017 12:33:28 AM

Aug 23, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Eden Kennan
14765 Leadwell St
Van Nuys, CA 91405-1810
[REDACTED]
ekennan@earthlink.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 24, 2017 1:02:23 AM

Aug 24, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Sam Chao
2209 S Electric Ave
Alhambra, CA 91803-4517

the_ring-of-fire@hotmail.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Thursday, August 24, 2017 1:03:30 AM

Aug 24, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

Humans have a sacred duty to help all creatures and disappointingly we poison, encroach, poach, trap and hunt most of our fellow creatures. Creatures who for the most part do us no harm. We are the world's most dangerous creature who spends much of our time building weapons of mass destruction and for recreation enjoys violent sports. How can we not reach out to help our fellow creatures when we are the bad guys? . During the five-year review for this species, please do not down-list or de-list panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.,
Sincerely,
Bill Dake
528 Larch Ave.
So. SF, CA 94080-1612

Sincerely,

Mr. Bill Dake
528 Larch Ave
South San Francisco, CA 94080-1612
[REDACTED]
billdake@sbcglobal.net

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Thursday, August 24, 2017 1:33:20 AM

Aug 24, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Tracey Dolbow
317 Minck Ave
West Berlin, NJ 08091-1404
[REDACTED]
kylersmom818@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 24, 2017 6:32:53 AM

Aug 24, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Susan Roberts
The Flat, Shady Nook
St Florence
Pembrokeshire, None SA70 8NB
[REDACTED]
roberts42@btinternet.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 24, 2017 7:03:22 AM

Aug 24, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Please help save these beautiful animals.

Thank you.
Vicki Maina
2500 Holmes Rd. Lot 101
Ypsilanti, MI 48198

Sincerely,

Ms. Vicki Maina
2500 Holmes Rd
Unit 101
Ypsilanti, MI 48198-6092
[REDACTED]
vmaina1959@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 24, 2017 8:33:50 AM

Aug 24, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Jennifer Guerra
975 W 74th St Apt 201
Hialeah, FL 33014-4753
[REDACTED]
jenn.guerra@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 24, 2017 9:04:28 AM

Aug 24, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Dr. Stephanie Wallio
1705 Rondo Dr
Greenville, NC 27858-5337

swallio@yahoo.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Thursday, August 24, 2017 9:04:37 AM

Aug 24, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.
Vanessa Vartanian

Sincerely,

Ms. vanessa vartanian
30171 Olmstead Rd
Flat Rock, MI 48134-1685
vanessavartanian@yahoo.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Thursday, August 24, 2017 12:04:46 PM

Aug 24, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Carolee Little
153 Little Hill Rd
Webster, NH 03303-7103
[REDACTED]
clittle49@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 24, 2017 12:34:20 PM

Aug 24, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Aaron h
7550 Peavine Ridge St
Las Vegas, NV 89139-5308

aaron@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 24, 2017 12:34:21 PM

Aug 24, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. kris hill
7550 Peavine Ridge St
Las Vegas, NV 89139-5308
[REDACTED]
kristeenlv@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 24, 2017 12:34:29 PM

Aug 24, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Lynn Dee
7550 Peavine Ridge St
Las Vegas, NV 89139-5308

lynndeelv@hotmail.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Thursday, August 24, 2017 1:33:40 PM

Aug 24, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Robert Foley Jr
33 Water St Fl 2
Attleboro, MA 02703-2007

foleyjrc@live.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Thursday, August 24, 2017 2:05:18 PM

Aug 24, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Michelle Hudgens
85 Guerra Dr
San Luis Obispo, CA 93405-7810
[REDACTED]
mnmarks@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 24, 2017 2:34:32 PM

Aug 24, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

Please don't risk the loss of this essential predator for the sake of ranching and development interests.

Sincerely,

Ms. Holly Moloney
5272 Medlock Corners Dr
Norcross, GA 30092-2938
[REDACTED]
hdoshaw@live.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Thursday, August 24, 2017 3:04:20 PM

Aug 24, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Sara Ottaviano
4 Van Wagner Rd
Highland, NY 12528-1714
[REDACTED]
tabbynystic@yahoo.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Thursday, August 24, 2017 3:41:41 PM

Aug 24, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Helen Tam-Semmens
36 Deer Run
Stoddard, NH 03464

htamsemmens@gmail.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Thursday, August 24, 2017 5:28:57 PM

Aug 24, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Dan Struble
512 E Weber Rd
Columbus, OH 43202-2235

dhstruble.l@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 24, 2017 8:38:37 PM

Aug 24, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Sravanthi Putumbaka
840 W Blackhawk St
Chicago, IL 60642-2592

psravanthi@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Thursday, August 24, 2017 9:45:17 PM

Aug 24, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Dotti King
2056 Walnut Grove Ave
San Jose, CA 95128-1236
[REDACTED]
dottiking22@gmail.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Thursday, August 24, 2017 10:04:23 PM

Aug 24, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Dr. Patricia Soteropoulos
16 Vincent St
Chatham, NJ 07928-2265

psoteropoulos@me.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 25, 2017 3:05:23 AM

Aug 25, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Carole Crowe Frank
400 2nd Ave Apt 15c
New York, NY 10010-4017
[REDACTED]
carolecrowefrank@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 25, 2017 5:12:01 AM

Aug 25, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss envera zelkanovic
7701 NE 66th Way
Vancouver, WA 98662-4212
[REDACTED]
e.zelkanovic@students.clark.edu

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Friday, August 25, 2017 9:35:54 AM

Aug 25, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Chelsea Haylett
7968 Lincoln Way W
Saint Thomas, PA 17252-9560
chaylett147@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 25, 2017 9:39:07 AM

Aug 25, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Veronica Rehne
Kastsjö 5
Gävle, CO 80426

veronica.brant@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 25, 2017 10:07:01 AM

Aug 25, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Silva Martinelli
Via San Bernardino
Ponte Tresa, None 6988
000 silvasquit@yahoo.it

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 25, 2017 12:38:00 PM

Aug 25, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Dr. Naiara Pinto
248 E California Blvd
Apt 4
Pasadena, CA 91106-3674

naiarapinto@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 25, 2017 1:07:30 PM

Aug 25, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Eric Ott
531 Columbus Ave
Benton Harbor, MI 49022-4923
[REDACTED]
dancingcarmen73@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 25, 2017 5:36:49 PM

Aug 25, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Shirley Feldman
20540 Strath Haven Dr
Gaithersburg, MD 20886-4057
[REDACTED]
shirley4animals@comcast.net

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Friday, August 25, 2017 6:06:59 PM

Aug 25, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Heather Harrison-Rouillard
303 Mohegan Park Rd
Norwich, CT 06360-2033
1975animal_lover@sbcglobal.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 25, 2017 6:07:33 PM

Aug 25, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

If the science indicates that the Florida panther has not recovered sufficiently to be delisted or downgraded, follow the dictates of science and the law. Protection before profits.

Sincerely,

Ms. Lisa Brenskelle
2823 La Branch St
Houston, TX 77004-2730

brenskelle@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 25, 2017 6:14:31 PM

Aug 25, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Melody Gallegos
6296 S Vinecrest Dr
Salt Lake City, UT 84121-1900
teedoff1968@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 25, 2017 8:07:18 PM

Aug 25, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Gloria Mejia
658 El Dorado Ln
Hemet, CA 92543-8820

gmejia05@verizon.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 25, 2017 9:36:46 PM

Aug 25, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Mary Schmotzer
201 Waller Mill Rd
Williamsburg, VA 23185-2947
[REDACTED]
mkschmotzer@yahoo.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Friday, August 25, 2017 9:37:25 PM

Aug 25, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Katherine Hope
1004 Adams St
Ottawa, IL 61350-4311
[REDACTED]
kfhope1@mchsi.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Friday, August 25, 2017 11:36:59 PM

Aug 25, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Shelli Drummer
2304 Island Dr NW
Olympia, WA 98502-9751
[REDACTED]
drummstixx@comcast.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 26, 2017 12:37:01 AM

Aug 25, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Carol Denaro
1726 Shepherd Ln
Glen Mills, PA 19342-1900
[REDACTED]
carolanned53@msn.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Saturday, August 26, 2017 2:37:32 AM

Aug 26, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Beth Cole
1850 Sheringham Dr
Colorado Springs, CO 80951-4768

bcole1964@msn.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 26, 2017 3:07:08 AM

Aug 26, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Shawn Kovacich
3495 Lakeside Dr
172
Reno, NV 89509-4841
[REDACTED]
osucat1@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 26, 2017 4:07:15 AM

Aug 26, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Cindy Hauffe
91 Shady Ln
Fanwood, NJ 07023-1750 pass
cnidy@comcast.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 26, 2017 4:44:20 AM

Aug 26, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Loretta Lukas
4525 Bersaglio St
Las Vegas, NV 89135-2462
[REDACTED]
libra082@earthlink.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Saturday, August 26, 2017 6:37:42 AM

Aug 26, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Gina Jones
3275 Randall Blvd
Naples, FL 34120-5556
[REDACTED]
ginagreg41@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 26, 2017 8:37:43 AM

Aug 26, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.
Cindy Sammons
Bradenton, FL. 34212

Sincerely,

Mrs. Cindy Sammons
609 Sand Crane Ct
Bradenton, FL 34212-5225
[REDACTED]
wwsouth54@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 26, 2017 10:08:05 AM

Aug 26, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Melanie Huss
3592 Twelve Oaks Cir
Merritt Island, FL 32953-8245
[REDACTED]
melhuss84@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 26, 2017 11:08:44 AM

Aug 26, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Selena Cruz
815 Cabrillo Ct
Gilroy, CA 95020-3304
[REDACTED]
ninelvz@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 26, 2017 12:08:04 PM

Aug 26, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Monique Kourdae
10517 Malaguena Ln NE
Albuquerque, NM 87111-1840
[REDACTED]
kourdae@comcast.net

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Saturday, August 26, 2017 1:08:25 PM

Aug 26, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Joanne Conti
PO Box 59
Sheffield, MA 01257-0059
[REDACTED]
jocon1029@yahoo.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Saturday, August 26, 2017 1:08:45 PM

Aug 26, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Carolyn Dove
155 1st St
Broadway, VA 22815-9544

cjlovesobx@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 26, 2017 4:09:10 PM

Aug 26, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Melanie Schnathorst
9672 Golden Eagle Ave
Highlands Ranch, CO 80129-5734
[REDACTED]
randyandmels@comcast.net

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Saturday, August 26, 2017 4:17:14 PM

Aug 26, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Lisa Salazar
PO Box 5795
17777 Rose Avenue
Shasta Lake, CA 96089-5795
[REDACTED]
lisajunior@netscape.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Saturday, August 26, 2017 6:39:30 PM

Aug 26, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Michelle Schnoor
6183 Shady Side Rd
Shady Side, MD 20764-9690
[REDACTED]
meeshell83@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Saturday, August 26, 2017 9:09:09 PM

Aug 26, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Sharon Velotas
740 Breeze Hill Rd Apt 154
Vista, CA 92081-4309
[REDACTED]
svelotas@gmail.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Sunday, August 27, 2017 12:09:15 AM

Aug 26, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss adrienne kawamura
7704 234th St SW
PO Box 334
Edmonds, WA 98026-8836
[REDACTED]
noifsaboutit@comcast.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 27, 2017 1:39:21 AM

Aug 27, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Byron Elberts
1132 Encantadora Ln
Lancaster, CA 93535-5038

belberts@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 27, 2017 9:39:58 AM

Aug 27, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Lelah Liddell
24612 Brian Rd
Zachary, LA 70791-6234
[REDACTED]
kiwi441a@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 27, 2017 9:40:07 AM

Aug 27, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

PLEASE PROTECT THEM.

Thank you.
Sarah Peacock
770 E Greenview Road
Itasca IL 60143

Sincerely,

Ms. Sarah Peacock
770 E Greenview Rd
Itasca, IL 60143-1834
[REDACTED]
sgreenpeacock@fmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 27, 2017 9:46:07 AM

Aug 27, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Patrizia Brais
Via PISOLE, 61
Pavia, NC 27030
[REDACTED]
patty1213@alice.it

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 27, 2017 10:10:21 AM

Aug 27, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Mingion Plummer
1028 Bernice Rd
Rockledge, FL 32955-2202
[REDACTED]
mingionplummer@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 27, 2017 12:10:32 PM

Aug 27, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Mary Lang
205 Channing St
Chester, IL 62233-1619
[REDACTED]
mavnell@yahoo.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Sunday, August 27, 2017 12:40:18 PM

Aug 27, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Brigid Courtney
50 Hardin Hill Rd
Duxbury, MA 02332-5115
brigid.courtney426@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 27, 2017 3:10:54 PM

Aug 27, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Amanda Spalt
300 W 49th St
Apt 501
New York, NY 10019-7572
[REDACTED]
victoriaraye@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 27, 2017 3:40:54 PM

Aug 27, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

Since these animals are still endangered please make every effort to delist panthers from the protection afforded by the Endangered Species Act during the five year review.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Dr. Geoffrey Robinson
130 Chelsea Ln
Union Grove, WI 53182-9328
[REDACTED]
gdr1975@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 27, 2017 3:40:58 PM

Aug 27, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Miss Kamille Chin
11124 Kempton Vista Dr
Riverview, FL 33579-4091
[REDACTED]
kam2198@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 27, 2017 4:40:43 PM

Aug 27, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Jo Johnson
111 River Valley Loop
Maumelle, AR 72113-7137

garglingdogs@outlook.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 27, 2017 4:40:48 PM

Aug 27, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Barbara Marciani
155 Millard Ave
Yonkers, NY 10708-2710

bamarciani@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 27, 2017 4:41:15 PM

Aug 27, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Jeffrey Stout
29 Rockaway Ave
Marblehead, MA 01945-1726

jeffreystout@comcast.net

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 27, 2017 6:10:58 PM

Aug 27, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Josh Riembauer
Spook Ridge Road
USR, NJ 07458

joshyriem@gmail.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Sunday, August 27, 2017 8:41:06 PM

Aug 27, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. grace k sanchez
2608 Kansas Dr Apt F-137
Fort Collins, CO 80525-7656
[REDACTED]
princesagracek13@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Sunday, August 27, 2017 9:11:14 PM

Aug 27, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Barbara Harris
8645 Ashbury Ct
Blaine, WA 98230-9756
[REDACTED]
barbara438@comcast.net

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Monday, August 28, 2017 1:11:31 AM

Aug 28, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Mary Hurley
2144 N Lincoln Park W
Apt 21b
Chicago, IL 60614-4641
[REDACTED]
fuffernut@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 28, 2017 4:11:52 AM

Aug 28, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Dimitris Tzanis
peloponnhsou 54
athens, PA 15342
0 dtzanis@otenet.gr

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 28, 2017 5:11:51 AM

Aug 28, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Laura Gilmer
757 Morgan Ave
Chattahoochee, FL 32324-1730
[REDACTED]
lauragilmer100@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 28, 2017 9:42:36 AM

Aug 28, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection. These beautiful God given creatures are also a national treasure. We are rapidly tearing down and removing history in this country every day, please don't make the Panthers part of this horror story. Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Helen Hunter Knight
153 Salem Rd
Picayune, MS 39466-7474
[REDACTED]
arbrae12@gmail.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Monday, August 28, 2017 11:12:46 AM

Aug 28, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Joseph Gilleese
304 E Hebron Tpke
Lebanon, CT 06249-2511
[REDACTED]
jagmd357@hotmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 28, 2017 1:43:02 PM

Aug 28, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Gretchen Sherrill
2109 Paige St
Knoxville, TN 37917-4441
[REDACTED]
ggsherrill@yahoo.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Monday, August 28, 2017 3:34:33 PM

Aug 28, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Anna Zancan
18 Southern Blvd
Danbury, CT 06810-7942
[REDACTED]
annamz5454@yahoo.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Monday, August 28, 2017 4:05:35 PM

Aug 28, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Veronica Galarza
8633 77th St
Woodhaven, NY 11421-1034
[REDACTED]
vero_gal78@yahoo.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Monday, August 28, 2017 4:34:56 PM

Aug 28, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Jordan Salmanowicz
30 Sawyer Ave
Dorchester, MA 02125-2036
[REDACTED]
jsalmanowicz@gmail.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Monday, August 28, 2017 4:43:06 PM

Aug 28, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. nicholas mouzourakis
30600 Nye Ct
Livonia, MI 48154-3618
[REDACTED]
nickmouzo@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 28, 2017 5:13:11 PM

Aug 28, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Brian Pappas
291 Granite St
Quincy, MA 02169-4931
[REDACTED]
brahimali@hotmail.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Monday, August 28, 2017 7:04:55 PM

Aug 28, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Ellen Byrnes
408 Lindberg Ave
W Lafayette, IN 47906-2032
[REDACTED]
eebyrnes@gmail.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Monday, August 28, 2017 8:13:31 PM

Aug 28, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Joseph Veselenak
406 E Washington St
Apt 2
Belding, MI 48809-1755
[REDACTED]
jveselenak@gmail.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Monday, August 28, 2017 8:35:08 PM

Aug 28, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Kim Beach
721 Island View Cir
Port Hueneme, CA 93041-3449
[REDACTED]
kbeach313@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 28, 2017 9:04:49 PM

Aug 28, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Allison Taylor
6205 Millwright Ct
Greensboro, NC 27410-8318
[REDACTED]
algriffin2@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 28, 2017 9:04:54 PM

Aug 28, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Barbara McCoy-Williams
3979 Chestnut Ridge Loop
Gahanna, OH 43230-8321
[REDACTED]
king.law4@yahoo.com

From: Humane Society Legislative Fund
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do not downlist or delist panthers from the ESA
Date: Monday, August 28, 2017 9:35:03 PM

Aug 28, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Melissa Mitchell
105 Beech Tree Ln
105
Emporia, VA 23847-2404
[REDACTED]
melissasmitchell@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please do NOT downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 6:27:00 AM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

We can & must do better for all animals.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Jennifer Hutchins Farrell
456 4th St S
Bayport, MN 55003-1512
[REDACTED]
fighter7lover@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please protect panthers
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 4:58:27 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you for your attention to this important matter.

Sincerely,

Ms. Janelle Davidson
2020 Highway 99 N
Unit 42
Ashland, OR 97520-9670
[REDACTED]
davidson.janelle@yahoo.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please Protect The Panther! Do not downlist or delist panthers from the Endangered Species Act
Date: Friday, August 11, 2017 4:58:09 PM

Aug 11, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Panthers remain essential to keeping the Eco-system of the Everglades and swamps in balance and we should be working to make sure that they remain protected and are free to roam without threat of extinction.

Growing up in Florida and having the Panther as a school mascot in elementary school I was always saddened to hear about how few were left in the wild. Now to hear that they're finally making a come-back only for us to once again threaten their existence makes me fear for what else we might consider to jeopardize in the near future.

The Panther deserves to thrive in Florida as much as any other creature and future generations should have the chance to live in a world where it continues to be a symbol of strength and pride in Florida.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Danelle Michaud
6499 SE Held Ct
Stuart, FL 34997-8320
[REDACTED]
danellemichaud@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please retain protection of panthers under the Endangered Species Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 2:47:34 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Leslie Tawnamaia
116 Wil. Lyford
Marshfield, VT 05658
[REDACTED]
ltawnamaia@gmail.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please save these these Panthers.
Date: Thursday, August 17, 2017 3:05:01 AM

Aug 17, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

During the five-year review for this species, please do not downlist or delist panthers from Endangered Species Act protection.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Douglas Zastrow
394 Canford Pl
Gahanna, OH 43230-2507
[REDACTED]
pandykitty1@aol.com

From: The Humane Society of the United States
To: David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Subject: Please support the Humane Cosmetics Act
Date: Monday, August 14, 2017 8:21:30 PM

Aug 14, 2017

David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Dear David Shindle, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service,

Panthers are so iconic in Florida that they were chosen by school children to be the state animal. They deserve our respect and our protection. Federal protection remains essential, as turning management over to the state and increasing the use of lethal management would cause the species to once again be in danger of extinction after slowly building their numbers throughout the years.

Their current status does not meet the standards set by the Endangered Species Act to downlist or delist them. Panther conservation must be re-doubled to prevent their jeopardy. The progress made in reviving their population should not be prematurely dismantled now. Unlike all other mountain lion subspecies, Florida panthers are specially adapted to their Big Cypress Swamp and Everglades habitats. But they are increasingly threatened by climate change, habitat loss and road development. We must ensure their safety and survival if they are to persist for future generations.

I hope you will move quickly to finalize regulations containing key reforms, including eliminating the failed industry self-policing system and prohibiting devices (chains, pads, stacked and weighted shoes, hoof bands, etc.) that are integral to soring horses in the Tennessee Walking Horse, Racking Horse and related breeds from being used at horse shows.

Thank you for your attention to this issue!

Sincerely,

Mr. Joe Jankovic
530 Francisco St
Unit 316
San Francisco, CA 94133-1832

vonijoe@earthlink.net