

Willamette Valley Conservation Study

Conserving America's Great Outdoors

The acorn woodpecker is representative of the diverse community of bird species strongly associated with Oregon white oak woodlands.

Photo: USFWS

Mixed Oak Forest and Woodland

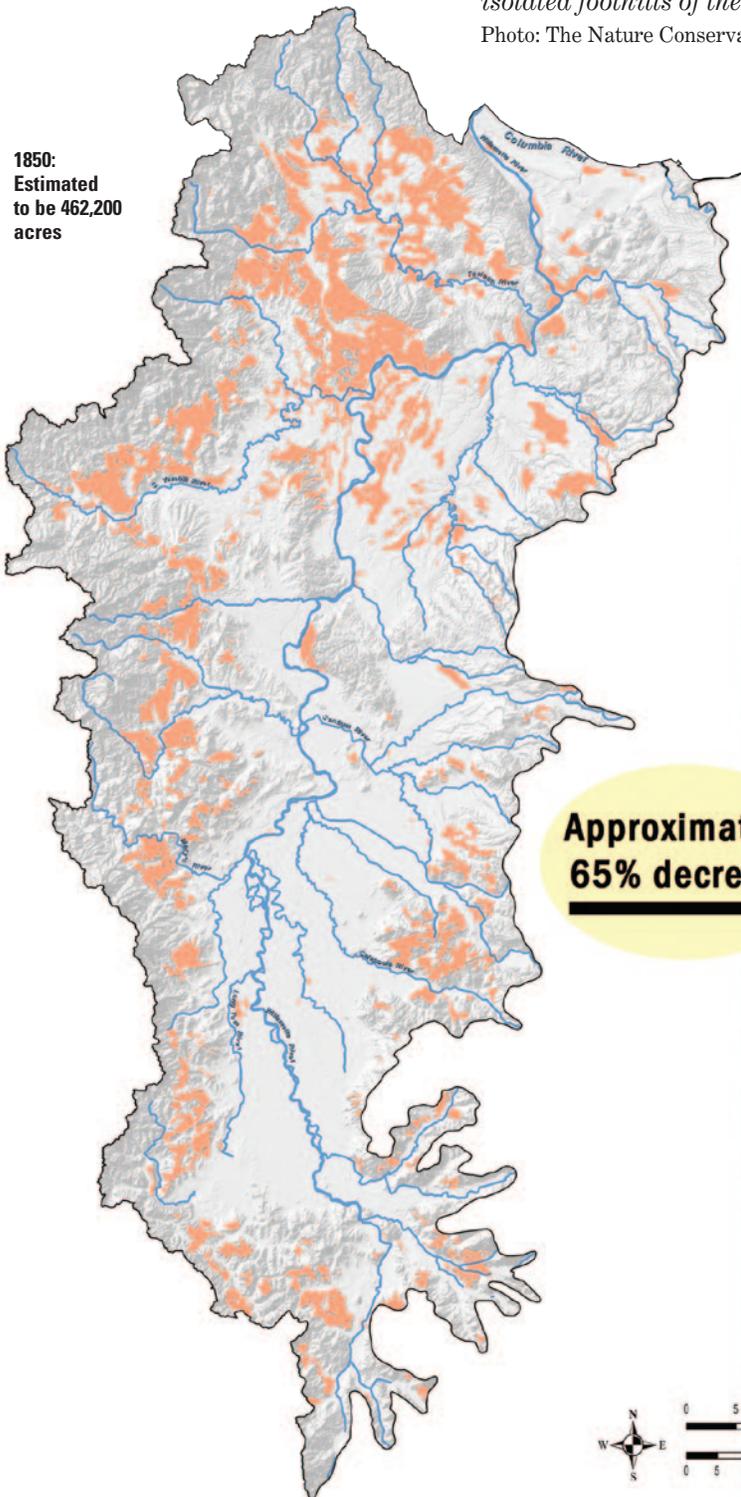

Photo: ©Sierra Forest Legacy

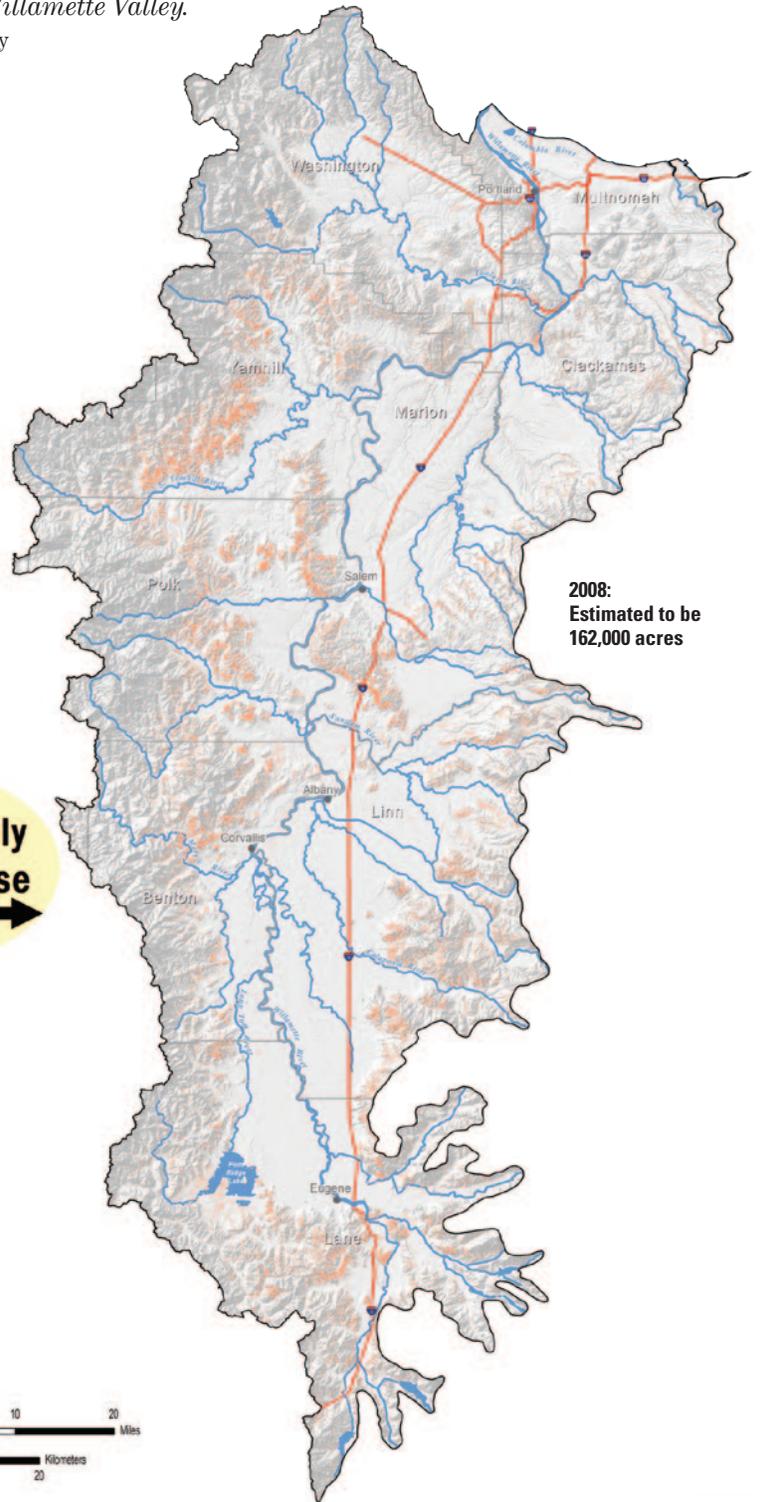

Oregon white oak woodland is a biologically rich type of hardwood forest which occurs in the isolated foothills of the Willamette Valley.

Photo: The Nature Conservancy

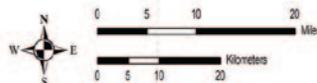

1850:
Estimated to be 462,200 acres

2008:
Estimated to be 162,000 acres

Approximately 65% decrease

DATA SOURCE: The Nature Conservancy, 2008. Data is based on General Land Office surveys between 1851 and 1910.

DATA SOURCE: The Nature Conservancy, 2008. Data is a compilation of several datasets published between 1980 and 2008.